A SEA LYRIC.

They went to save the salmon nets
Out of the hungry sea.
Twas just outside of the Harbor bar,
As near as near could be;
It was just behind the sandy bar,
The women were all on the quay.

The bost rode o'er the rolling foam,
They pulled against the wind,
For 'twas rough within the Harbor bar,
The breakers reared behind;
And gray gulls shricked o'er the shelt'rin
bar.

The caverns with sea birds were lined.

They went to draw the fishing nets: A cruel, created wave Swept slowly on to the Harbor bar, And scooped for them a grave; The boat heeled over the harbor bar, And keel up to the women drave.

They went to save the salmon nets
Out of the leaden sea,
Twas just outside of the Harbor bar,
Near to home as could be;
It was just behind the sandy bar
And beyond the little stone quay.

One moment black against the wave,
The women still with dread.
Then the boat leapt over the Harbor bar,
And on to the Mothers sped;
And two lads lost o'er the shifting bar
Till the sea giveth up her dead. They went to save the salmon nets Out of the surging sea,

Out of the surging sea, From just without the sandy bar, So near, as you can see;
The screams that rang o'er the fleeting bar
Were the women's cries from the quay.
