Hood River Letter.
Hood River, Or., April 8, 1892. Editor Chronicle:

I find in the Hood River Glacier of the 2d inst. the following:

One of Captain Coe's work horses was found dead in the lower edge of the little alfalfa field in Idlewilde this week. the alfalfa field in Idlewilde this week.
The horse was down in such a manner that he could not have gotten up, and if it were not for the fact that there has been an evident attempt to destroy the identity of the animal, his death might be laid to natural causes. Besides having his side cut open, coal oil had been poured on the dead animal and set fire to, burning the mane and tail off and singeing the hair on the body. It looks very much as though the animal had purposely been killed, for besides the attempt to burn it, it does not seem possible that it could have got in the position it did. From the evidences of the struggle made by the animal it is probable that the burning was done while it was yet alive. It does not seem possible that any human being could so torture a dumb brute, but the evidence compels us to believe it was done.

See the Glacier man. In order to save the reputation if the good citizens of Hood River, I will state that I saw a horse lying dead near the Alfalfa patch in Idliwilde, about sixty rods from my cottage, now occupied by J.
