College Students Strike for Rules-Arbor Day Celebration ----Memorial Trees.

CORVALLIS, Or., April 11, 1892. Editor Chronicle:

In the last few days events have transpired that will long be remembered by the Oregon Agricultural College. A week or so ago the preparatory department was given new rules and regulations, very different from what the students are used to. Hitherto the preparatory have had the same advantages and privileges as their college mates who were in the 1st, 2nd, or 3rd year classes. But according to the new arrangement they would have to study at the college, and have only twenty-five minutes for each recitation. The classes were to be split up and the whole department run on public school principles

As the students did not like the change, they petitioned the faculty to restore the old rules, then waited two days and resolved to quit the college till their wrongs were righted. Acaccordingly only three out of the fiftyone preparatory students were present, Wednesday morning. The board of regents will try to straighten matters.

lege by the planting of memorial trees; an elm in front of the college, in mem-Earnest M. Miller. Before the planting of the trees a good literary programme Music for the occasion was furnished by the cadet brass band and the college choir.

The board of regents met today and complied with the wishes of the preparatory students by restoring the old rules slightly modified. The reading and spelling classes are the only ones affected now by the change.

Reminiscence of Carlyle. Mr. Robert Harrison, who has been librarian of the London library for more than thirty-four years in the course of his presidential address at the Librarians' conference at Nottingham, gave some interesting reminiscences of Carlyle, who was accustomed to frequent the library. He said: "Carlyle often visited the li-brary. His conversation was most amus-ing, full of extravagant and exaggerated statements, and always ending with a lond laugh, apparently at himself. He used the library books extensively for his later works, and was guilty of the reprehensible practice of writing on the margin of the books. I must admit that his remarks were never meaningless, but chiefly consisted of corrections of date or errors in the text. "One remark of his, however, which was pretty well known, was a criticism. It occurred in Charles Dibdin's collection of songs, the last page of which contained the ordinary version of 'Rule Britannia.' At the foot of this boastful song Carlyle had written 'Cock-a-doodle-doo,' with a small forest of notes of exclamation after it. In a case like that the librarian would be a martinet, indeed, if he effaced from the book an expression so charac teristic of the man of genius who wrote it."-Pall Mall Gazette.
