A HOME IN VENICE.

AN ENGLISHMAN'S IDEAL ABODE IN THE CITY OF CANALS.

A Venetian Palace, Its Treasures of Art and Personal Interest—A Few of the Many Ornaments, Pictures, Books and Bits of Rare Bric-a-Brac.

When some five and twenty years ago Sir Henry Layard resolved to make for himself, and for the treasures of art which he had gathered from the four winds of heaven, a home in Venice, he found, fortunately enough, that the Ca' (or Casa) Capello was just at the very moment at his disposal. It had been the abode for several years of an Englishman who had just died, and who had left Mr. Malcolm, then well known among the English residents and now their doyen, his executor. A friendship had long existed between Mr. Malcolm and Sir Henry Layard, born of similarity of taste, which has ripened with many years of neighborhood and intercourse.

It was thus that the Ca' Capello came into the hands of Sir Henry Layard, and from that day it has been his home. Hither in the intervals of his ministerial duties, his missions and his visits to his English kinsfolk, he has returned with ever growing zest and affection. Here he has surrounded himself with a fine library, a noble collection of pictures and bronzes, marbles and mosaics, tapestries, ancient furniture and bric-a-brac, relics of the past, the spoils of a long and varied career. Here, too, in the year 1889, he brought his wife, a daughter of the late Sir John Guest. It is barely possible to reach the Ca' Capello on foot. You may cross the Rialto and bear toward the left through and across a series of tortuous and intricate calli, but the two handsome gondolas, reposing on the broad bosom of the canal at the door of Ca' Capello, which has every right to be called the front, suggest to the callers the only rational method of entrance. It has been said that the house is not one of the largest; its aspect, however, is undoubtedly one of the most attractive in the most beautiful highway in the world.

THE HOUSE. The two sides of the house, one in the Rio di San Polo, the principal, with the porch on the Grand canal, give scope for a display of color which elsewhere might suggest garishness, but which in Venice, par excellence the city of many colors, is natural and pleasing. As your gondola reaches the broad flight of steps behind the tall green pail, you cannot fail to notice that every window sill bears its burden of flowers after our English fashion, and that the portico is a veritable floral bowery, with a conservatory over it, in which, beside the greenery, an immense Venetian glass chandelier is a most striking object. It is a mass of vine with depending black grapes, great creeping convolvuluses, canariensis and white jessamine, all struggling for life apparently, with no inconsiderable degree of success, on the trellis work which supports them.

As is common in Italian private residences, what we ordinarily describe at home as the ground floor is given up to the servants and the domestic offices of the establishment. A broad staircase on the left of the entrance, on either side of which, fixed in the wall, is a fragment of sculpture from Nineveh, leads into a hall of noble proportions which divides the house itself into two unequal parts. Here some of the larger pieces of furniture, such as the cabinets, are to be found; and here, too, a pair of admirable three-quarter length portraits of Sir Henry and Lady Layard, painted in Madrid by Palmarioli, head of the Spanish academy at Rome, face each other. Another portrait of Sir Henry Layard challenges an even closer inspection—that, namely, by Ludwig Passini, which was shown in the exhibition of the Royal academy. Large reception rooms give out on either side of the hall, and, like it, all are floored with terrazzo, a material which to its great beauty adds the advantage of being absolutely unimpassable.

TASTEFUL FURNISHINGS. The dining room and the drawing rooms are filled, but not crowded, with beautiful works of art, including masterpieces of such painters as Gentile Bellini, Bonafazio, Sebastian del Piombo and many other famous Italian masters. Nor are the exquisite and delightful productions of the furnaces and work-rooms of Murano forgotten. Of the modern Venetian glassblowing processes, Sir Henry is most indisputably the founder, and some of the most perfect specimens of this beautiful art are, as it is fitting, to be seen in his house, as well as some beautiful inlay work, and the admirable woodwork by Binaghi, who executed the famous double staircase in walnut wood for Lord Wimborne, at Canford, under Sir Henry's directions.

Sir Henry's own sanctum is on the upper floor of the Casa. Here are records and memorials of a more personal kind than were noticed in the lower reception room, and among them the Englishman does not fail to notice the framed certificate on illuminated vellum, headed "Challis, Mayor," which sets forth the bestowal of the honorary freedom of the city of London upon Anson Henry Layard. Here, too, are some noble bronze figures, portfolios, huge volumes bound in vellum and gold, and a host of books—nearly all, it may be remarked, of quite modern literature—together with the latest periodicals. It is characteristic of Sir Henry Layard's wide and comprehensive intellect that, in spite of his being in the popular imagination with the history of the remotest past of which we have any knowledge, there is no living man more completely what the slang of the day calls "up to date."

Lighthouse Lamps and Lenses.

In lighthouses there are six orders of lights, graded according to their intensity. The lamp of the lowest or sixth order, which consumes only half a gill of coal oil an hour, gives about as much light as an ordinary parlor reading lamp (say 12 candle power), while the largest or first order lamp, which burns sixteen gills an hour, gives 450 candle power of light. But while the naked flame of the lamp gives this much light, the French Fresnel lens in which the lamp is set condenses and concentrates this light, so that it is multiplied in power many times. Thus the little 13 candle power flame of the sixth order lamp has in a lens a power of 75 candles; and the great 450 candle power light of the first order lamp, when placed in its enormous lens, gives a power of some 13,000 candles. Such a lens is 13 feet high and has a diameter of 6 feet.—Harper's Young People.

A seamless steel boat, which has been patented by an English engineer, has been launched from the yard of the company that was formed to work the patent at Wakefield, England.

The boat is fifteen feet long, 4 feet beam, weighs 325 pounds, and will carry six persons. It was made from a single piece of steel, compressed into form by powerful hydraulic machinery.

The company has an extensive plant, containing a press weighing 165 tons, and giving a pressure equal to 800 pounds to the square inch.

It is intended to build the boats for service on large steamships and vessels going to countries where the climate is hot and dry, as the nature of the construction of these boats renders them more seaworthy than similar craft of wood, as they will neither shrink nor warp. They are fitted in the interior with wood, and are therefore useful for pleasure boats.—Philadelphia Record.

Winn, Geary Court, San Francisco, and hundreds of others who have used it in constipation. One letter is a sample of hundreds. Elkington writes: "I have been for years subject to bilious headaches and constipation. Have been so bad for a year back have had to take a physic every other night or else I would have a headache. After taking one bottle of J. V. S., I am in splendid shape. It has done wonderful things for me. People similarly troubled should try it and be convinced."

A Severe Law.

The English people look more closely to the genuineness of these teas than we do. In fact, they have a law under which they make seizures and destroy adulterated products that are not what they are represented to be. Under this statute thousands of pounds of tea have been burned because of their wholesale adulteration.

Tea, by the way, is one of the most notorious adulterated articles of commerce. Not alone are the bright, shiny green teas artificially colored, but thousands of pounds of substitutes for tea leaves are used to swell the bulk of cheap teas; ash, sloe, and willow leaves being those most commonly used. Again, sweepings from tea warehouses are colored and sold as tea. Even exhausted tea leaves gathered from the tea-houses are kept, dried, and made over and find their way into the cheap teas.

The English government attempts to stamp this out by confiscation; but no tea is too poor for us, and the result is, that probably the poorest teas used by any nation are those consumed in America.

Beech's Tea is presented with the guaranty that it is unadulterated and unadulterated; in fact, the sun-dried tea leaf pure and simple. Its purity insures superior strength about one third less of it being required for an infusion than the artificial teas, and its fragrance and exquisite flavor is at once apparent. It will be a revelation to you. In order that its purity and quality may be guaranteed, it is sold only in pound packages bearing this trade-mark:
