LAND EDITOR.

MAY'S INFLUENCE ON A PORT-From an editorial in a late issue of the Telegram we infer that the editor is a widower with a large family of young children. It appears he had been paying attention to a Portland lady named April, when a stranger, called May, probably from Eastern Oregon, visited the webfoot metropolis and fairly captured the widower's heart. A Telegram compositor found a couple of love letters which the editor recently addressed to the two damsels and, weaving them into a "leader," placed both in the editorial column. That gave the whole snap away. The editor frankly tells his former flame that he has no more use for her. She is too old for him. She never tried to please him anyhow, but "stormed and wept and tore her hair, and screamed and wailed most of the time." She had become jealous, too, of The Oregon Lime for The Dalles The Oregon Lime for The Dalles probably from Eastern Oregon, visited time." She had become jealous, too, of the widower's attention to her younger and fairer rival. And so he determines to cast her off but, as if afraid of the effect of his rejection on one so supremely sensative, he advises here to take a twelve-month's sea voyage, hinting the while that if she comes back better tempered, with more smiles and less tears, he may talk business to her. But he does not mean a word of it, and his letter to Miss May-whoever she is, proves it. He tells the latter, as if marking the contrast between her and her jilted rival, that she is "young, fresh, fair, smiling, beautiful; that she never weeps, unless; perchance, "just a drop, lost next moment in a dimple." Then the old fool fairly slobbers over with spooniness and he calls his new flame, "bright, beautiful, graceful, happy, radiant, glorions May," and wants to get away from the print shop, and be with her always, and kneel down before her and make—an all round lunatic of himself. Then a jealous thought flashes across his mind or, possibly it was only resentment at some wrong that a member of the Portland branch of the weather burean had done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May, and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls them a set done to Miss May and he calls the may are to Miss May and he calls the may are to Miss May and he calls the may are to Miss May and he calls the may are to Miss May and he calls the may are to Miss May and he calls the may are to Miss May and he calls the may are to Miss May and he calls the may are to Miss Miss Miss Miss done to Miss May, and he calls them a set the world knows that Pague, at least, is a FOR SALE. Twelve fine Eb. M. WILLIAMS, GEO. H. M. BEALL. mother's son of them to prostrate themselves before her and be thankful they are permitted to live while she remains in the country. Then once more, as if he feared that May might question the sincerity of his affection, he says: "Totell the truth and it is a truth so welling and swelling in our heart, I'm dead stuck on you," or words to that effect. Then he gets awful bad and blubbers something about "gazing with awesome tenderness into the unfathomable depths of her azure eyes," and something more about being bewildered and entranced, which is quite likely, for the next Dispensing Physicians' Prescriptions a Specialty. moment he asks May to be kind to "us," meaning the children, we suppose, and Night Druggists always in Attendance, swears he never liked April a bit, he Cor. Second and Union Ste only kept her company till May would come. Then finally the father's heart asserts itself and he addressed a postscrip to his motherless children, expecting, likely, May would send it to them, as he was busy in the office: "May is here," says the postscript, "revel all ye happy children, be better and brighter." It only remains for us to add, as we do with much tender sympathy for this lorn brother editor that May appears to be, either a grass-widow with no hope of a divorce, or a real widow with a family of children of her own or, possibly, the editor expects his mother-in-law to come and live with him for he says, not we imagine without a touch of plaintive self but we can have as much of her as any one can; and so we cannot com-plain."
