The following list of the ten wealthiest men in the United States, together with the business or industry in which their wealth has been accumulated ought to go far towards proving that the creation of millionaires is not the result of protection, each of the gentlemen's wealth having been acquired outside of protected industries: William Waldorf Astor, real estate; Jay Gould, railroads, telegraphs and speculation; John D. Rockefeller, oil; Cornelius Vanderbilt, railroads; William K. Vanderbilt, railroads; Henry M. Flagler, oil; John J. Blair, railroads and banking; Russell Sage, railroads and speculation; Collis P. Huntington, railroads; William Rockefeller, oil.

There is more truth than poetry in the following from the Walla Walla Journal: "Portland directs the commerce of the northwest and desires to continue so to do. She establishes the rate on freight to the Sound as well as to Portland. She has her hand upon our throat and chokes our efforts. She charges all that the commodity will bear in transportation and makes other exactions, and the Oregonian wonders that the people grow restive under the great love Portland bears for the Inland Empire—that they so obstinately refuse to be satisfied with a condition that is so pleasing and altogether profitable to Portland.

This idea of the nobility, the humanitarian character of Free-Trade, has made many Free-Traders. Some people, especially Mugwumps, think it is "philosophical" to be cosmopolitan rather than patriotic. For our part, we must confess that Garfield's position is good enough for us: "For the present the world is divided into separate nationalities, and that Divine command still applies, 'He that provideth not for his own household hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel.'"

In 1891, during the seven months ending January 31st, the imports of hops into the United States amounted in value to $1,249,088. In 1892, during the corresponding period, after the benefits of protection had begun to be felt, our imports of hops amounted in value to $485,810. Thus protection enabled the hop-growers of this country to supply the difference, amounting in value to $763,278.

Again this billion-dollar country with a billion-dollar tariff goes on record for a billion dollars' worth of American products exported in 12 months ending April 30. Our imports for the same 12 months amounted to $832,098,765.54, 94 per cent. of which came in free. The excess of free over dutiable goods amount to $82,145,311. The balance of trade in our favor was $179,406,514.

Reference to our dispatches will show that everything is yet uncertain at Minneapolis, and balloting for the presidential candidates may not take place till tomorrow and, quite possibly, not till next week. If the contest over credentials should be settled in a committee of the whole, there is no telling when the convention may get down to balloting.

A German anatomist has recently announced the fact that after a careful examination of woman's knee he has found that it is unfitted for the maintenance of a standing posture. It is suggested that this decision be neatly framed and hung in a conspicuous place in elevated trains, ferry-boats and particularly the bridge cars.

Later—Returns from Prineville precinct, Crook county, which arrived this afternoon, give Bradshaw a majority of 134 over Watkins. The estimated majority for Bradshaw, in the county, is placed at 250. This would give Bradshaw a district majority of over 100. There can be no doubt of his election.

Returns have not yet arrived from Crook county and the election of circuit judge cannot be determined till they arrive. They are expected on the evening's stage. It will not surprise us if Judge Bradshaw is the victor.

The death of Sidney Dillon was reported from New York this forenoon.

NEVER SATISFIED.

DISCONTENT THE POWER THAT PUSHES US UPWARD AND ONWARD

One Step in Advance Encourages Man to Try for Greater Advance—The Problem of Progress Into Which the Thoughtful Man Sees Deeply.

Eager enthusiastic and sanguine people always expect to feel unbounded satisfaction in the actual possession of that which they strive for. The boy longs to be a man, the youth craves independence, one looks forward to marriage as his ideal of bliss, another yearns for wealth, one covets position, another power, one lingers for knowledge, another for skill, one sighs for opportunity, another for ability. Whatever be the goal of their ambition, they believe that to be the one thing without a flaw, the one thing which is to insure their happiness and in the possession of which their enthusiasm is never to grow cold and their happiness never to fade.

When this goal is reached, and it often is, how are these sanguine expectations realized? Is the mind content and satisfied? Is the pleasure unalloyed? Do the glowing colors continue as bright as before? Does their buoyancy receive no check? They have gained their point, they have secured what they desired, out have they realized what they anticipated? Has the success been so very successful after all?

Probably most of those who have had these experiences will have to confess that while in the first flush of possession all was joyous excitement, yet in a short time that feeling gave way to a calmer and more dispassionate view of its value. Certain flaws and defects that would have been utterly scouted became apparent; it grew to be a commonplace and ordinary possession, and however unwilling they might be to part with it, yet it was no longer upon that, but upon other things still out of reach that their interest and enthusiasm were centered.

Mr. Philip Hamerton, speaking of the present attitude of the French people toward a republican form of government, gives an apt illustration of this truth. He says: "The republican sentiment, though resolute as to the preservation of republican forms, has certainly become wonderfully cool. The coolness of the young men is especially remarkable and significant. They are mostly republicans, it is true, and have no belief in the possibility of a monarchical restoration, but the more intelligent of them see the difficulties and the defects of a republican government very plainly and they have a tendency to dwell upon those difficulties and defects in a manner that would astonish the militant republicans of the past. This composed and rational temper is the state of mind that comes upon all of us after the settled possession of an object, and it is a sign of possession." Most of us can cite instances to match this both in public and private affairs nearer home.

The chief point to be considered, however, is whether this result is or is not to be deplored. Some regard it among the bitter experiences of life, showing merely the transitory and shallow nature of all happiness and the futility of all hopes. "Of what use is it," they say, "to strive and labor for that which, when attained, loses its power of blessing and cheering us? Why encourage an enthusiasm that must fade away and hold up an ideal that is presently to be trodden under foot? So they sink into pessimism and come to believe that all is vanity and vexation of spirit. But the thoughtful and intelligent man sees far deeper into the problem than this. He has discovered that in this very truth, held to be so mournful, lies the kernel of all progress.

All the rose colored hopes that we indulge, all the attractive future spread out in such fair proportions to our imagination, lure us on to energy and effort. What does it matter that we exaggerate its importance, that we expect impossible effects from it, that all its defects and disadvantages are entirely hidden from our sight? Were it not so, how much of our striving would come to an end? And when we attain these objects, what more natural than that, the excitement of pursuit being over, and the tension of mind relaxed, a calmness of spirit should follow and an ability to judge of its excellence and its disadvantages more dispassionately and more correctly.

Suppose the enjoyment is less keen and the satisfaction less complete than we had anticipated. Should the mere pleasure felt in response be the main object of our striving? Satisfaction indeed can only be a transient emotion, to an intelligent and advancing man or woman. Were it a permanent condition of mind there could be no further progress.

Take, for example, the youth who longs for a higher education and tries, through many obstacles, to obtain it. At length the opportunity comes, and his wishes are crowned with success. Yet his delight, at first very keen, gradually subsides into a calm serenity. He comes by degrees to understand the meaning of his opportunity, its difficulties, its sacrifices, its labor, and the new field of hope and aspiration which it opens up. He no longer rests satisfied with the opportunity for which he longed, his enthusiasm now takes another form; his hopes are raised to a higher level; his energies are engaged in taking advantage of the fortunate occasion, and he now looks with equal earnestness to the time when he shall have finished his course and begun the life work which he has planned.

And when that time comes he will go through the same experience. His glad enthusiasm will be transferred to a still higher altitude, and his new ideal will draw him still onward and upward. Is there anything sad or bitter in such an experience? Is there any loss of real happiness in this fading away of temporary pleasure? It is indeed the only road to happiness that is worthy of a noble man or woman—that happiness which follows the vigorous use of the faculties and the constant pressing upward to higher and higher attainments.

A Pointer.
"I am very much pleased with Chamberlain's Cough Remedy," says H. M. Bangs, the druggist at Chatsworth, Ill. "During the epidemic of influenza here it took the lead and was very much better liked than other cough-medicines." The grip requires precisely the same treatment as a very severe cold, for which this remedy is so efficient. It will promptly loosen a cold and relieve the lungs, soon effecting a permanent cure, while most other medicines in common use for colds only give temporary relief. 50 cent bottles for sale by Blakeley & Houghton, druggists. d&w

Rheumatism Cured in Three Days.
Miss Grace Littlejohn is a little girl, aged eleven years, residing in Baltimore, Ohio. Read what she says: "I was troubled with rheumatism for two years, but could get nothing to do me any good. I was so helpless that I had to be carried like a babe when I was advised to get a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. I got it from our druggist, Mr. J. A. Kumber, and in three days I was up and walking around. I have not felt any return of it since and my limbs are limber as they ever were." 50 cent bottles for sale by Blakeley & Houghton, druggists. d&w

NEW TO-DAY.

TO THE PUBLIC.—It having come to our knowledge that a party in The Dalles in selling lime has made the assertion that he charges more for other brands than the "Oregon" because they are better, thereby implying that the "Oregon" is an inferior article, we desire to state that the "Oregon" is the strongest lime on the market; that it will work more plastic and leave the work when set stronger and firmer than any other lime at present manufactured in either Oregon or Washington. Wm. Butler & Co., Agents at The Dalles for the "Oregon" lime, are instructed to furnish, free of charge, any and all Oregon lime, which does not fully come up to the stipulations above set forth. The object of this notice is solely to defend our goods against the false imputations and statements of any person whatsoever. The Or. Marble and Lime Company, by T. F. Ostrom, 5-24dwlm General Agt.
