Begin Mummies.

In laying in your winter stock of mummies be careful to buy only the genuine.

The habit of making imitations of articles has extended even to the production of counterfeit back number subjects of the defunct Pharaohs. Now, ordinarily when one buys a thing he wants it fresh; but this rule does not hold good in the mummy trade. The staler they are the better, from a commercial point of view.

The high price of authentic mummies in a good state of preservation has led to the practice of manufacturing them to order, and the man who contemplates the purchase of a dozen or so of these cheerful objects should see that he gets what is left of something which once walked and talked in Egypt 3,000 or 4,000 years ago.

The mummy trade has been very active of late. Ordinary Egyptian citizens who have had no further use for themselves for thirty or forty centuries can be bought for about fifty dollars at Cairo, but a better quality of individual—a prince or a high priest, for instance—comes as high as $500 or even more.

If you should find in a mummy for which you paid $100, say, a lot of gold and jewelry worth about $1,000, you can be confident that the thing is genuine. An Egyptologist named Mosconas once made a small fortune in the purchase of one mummy which had once contained a rich man's vital spark.

The chest, which had been separated from the vital organs before embalming, had been filled again with gold and precious stones. —Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Explaining a Shower of Blood.

No phenomena of nature have excited more widespread consternation in ancient and even in comparatively modern times than the so called rains of blood, stones, fishes and reptiles.

The peoples of antiquity regarded such occurrences as dire warnings and portents, and at the present day their occasional happenings gives rise to much wonder and actual fear. Nevertheless, science has been able to ascertain the causes which produce these remarkable precipitations, which are accounted for by reasons entirely commonplace.

In 1670 a "rain of blood" fell at The Hague. The citizens got up in the morning and found that a shower of crimson fluid had fallen during the night. There was great excitement and the occurrence was looked upon as foretelling approaching war. One level headed physician got a little of the strange water from one of the canals and examined it under a microscope. He found that the fluid had not really a red color, but was simply filled with swarms of small crimson animalcules.

Further investigation showed these animalcules to be a species of water flea with branching horns. Presumably they were brought from a great distance by wind and deposited with the rain. However, notwithstanding this explanation, the Hollanders persisted in regarding this affair from a superstitious point of view, and many declared afterward that it was an omen giving warning of the desolation which was subsequently brought into the country with fire and sword by Louis XIV. —Washington Star.

Requisites of a Pet.

What is required for an everyday pet is that it shall be beautiful and intelligent; that it shall neither be too large nor too delicate, and if a bird that it shall sing or talk—preferably both. The first two requirements will not go far to limit the choice. Beauty of form and harmony of color are the almost inseparable attributes of that physical perfection which the natural life of animals demands, and he would be a rash man who classed any of the more highly organized animals as "stupid" without trial. —London Spectator.

Too Bad.

Soso (in the front row at the theater) —How dazingly beautiful Mlle. High-kicker's teeth look tonight.

Dr. Dentelle—They ought to; I spent all day cleaning and polishing them.

Soso—It must have tired her dreadfully.

Dr. Dentelle—Not at all. She sent them by her maid. —Kate Field's Washington.
