DUFUR INSTITUTE. A Fine Literary Program and Much Information Given.

The local institute at Dufur was opened at 11 a. m. Friday, March 10th, by singing, and all united in repeating the Lord's prayer.

In a few well-chosen remarks, Supt. Shelley outlined the work of the institute. Prof. Frazier gave a suitable response, showing how to enjoy the institute and make it a success; and declaring that educated people have all the great authors of the world for their companions and instructors.

The citizens of Dufur and vicinity showed their interest in the cause of education, and their appreciation of the work being done by Supt. Shelley and his co-laborers by their attendance, and by whole-souled hospitality.

The first exercise of the afternoon was an essay on Orthography, by L. B. Thomas, illustrated and supplemented by a blackboard diagram.

Miss Edith Peabody presented the subject of Fractions in an essay, assisted by a blackboard diagram, and illustrated by work on the board.

Waldo Brigham then read a unique and well-arranged essay on physiology.

Two other well-arranged and instructive essays followed. The first by Miss Annie Heisler on "The Noun," and the second by E. S. Hinman on "The Necessity of Early Training in the English Language."

The evening session was held at the U. B. Church, but as I was not present, the programme as carried out must suffice for this place.

Recitation—"Respected Friends." Roy Butler Select Reading. Miss Vira Whipple Comic Anecdote. Prof. Frazier Recitation—"Paniclems." John McAltee Essay—"Summary of the War of 1812."

Recitation—"Be a Man." Daisy Dufur Select Reading—"Society." Annie White Essay—"Assimilation." Eva Vanderpool Select Reading—"The Gladiator." Waldo Brigham Essay—"Roses." Blanche Dufur

Park Bolton put on the cap sheaf by reciting two Dutch pieces.

Permit me to say right here that all the exercises were enlivened by the good music for which Dufur is so justly famous. The people there believe in much and good music.

The first exercise of the second day was an able presentation of the relation of geography and history, by John A. Haylock. Miss Minnie Heisler followed with an essay, "Elements of a Sentence." Miss Emma Ward introduced the subject of Penmanship from a Spencerian Standpoint.

The afternoon exercises were led by an essay, "The Adjective," by Inez Thomas, followed by the writer in a talk on methods, and an interesting discussion.

"Co-ordination of the Sentence" was presented in a well-expressed essay by Omah Smith. "School Government," by Miss Kate Cronin, will be given an opportunity to speak for itself.

The importance of beautifying school grounds was forcibly urged by Prof. Frazier in his talk on "Something Lacking in Our Public Schools."

In the evening the institute again met in the U. B. church, when Superintendent Shelley in his "Notes and Suggestions on the Schools of the County," emphasizes two statements: First, there can be no success in any district without union and harmony.

Second, there can be no success without continued progress. The address was somewhat caustic, but not more so than the importance of the condition, being fully understood, demanded.

It was followed by an essay, "Geological Formation of the World as Seen in a Vision by the Prophet Moses," written by A. J. Dufur, Sr., but read by his granddaughter, Blanche Dufur.

Then followed short speeches by citizens of Dufur and a few visitors. Time and space forbid me to even summarize the many excellent thought-called forth by this novel process; but if you, Mr. Editor, and your many readers wish to be well entertained, and even somewhat instructed, attend our next local.

The Heart Beats Eight Hours Every Day.
