GREAT NATURAL ADVANTAGES.

The store of Prinz & Nitschke in The Dalles is full of furniture that was manufactured in Grand Rapids, Michigan. Thousands of other stores in the west contain furniture that was made in Grand Rapids, Mich. The power used for all the vast manufactories of Grand Rapids, Mich., is water. The stream that supplies Grand Rapids with this power is dignified with the name of Grand river, but is no larger than Mill creek is now, and has but 18 feet fall. The Columbia river a few miles above here has a thousand times as much horse power; the Des Chutes river has a hundred times as much, and Mill creek, for the most of the year, has ten times the amount. Some day this vast waste of power will be utilized and our furniture made at home and save the vast profits of freight, as well as keeping the money at home. We will then be a producing community instead of a consuming one, which is the sure foundation of all wealth. Times will then be uniformly prosperous. All seasons will then be alike, and not, as now, be flush during the wool and wheat shipments, and lifeless the balance of the year. With thousands of operatives receiving good wages, profits of trade invested at home, and vast establishments built up, the prospect is surely flattering. We have power enough within fifteen miles of us to run all the stationary engines in the United States.

Besides the question of power we are singularly fortunate in having at our threshold billions of feet of the finest sugar pine, fir, white and yellow pine and various other native woods. We are the Mecca of the wool producer, and with the vast wheat production, we are capable of supplying food, shelter and raiment to the world, if demanded.

The office-seekers do not confine their efforts for endorsement and influence to public officials alone, but the female relatives of the latter are also besieged by them in person or by mail. Mrs. Cleveland's mail has been burdened ever since election day with an appalling number of applications for office. One young woman, the wife of a new senator, recently suffered a dangerous attack of nervous prostration, brought on by nothing but the heart-rending personal supplications and letters to which she had been subjected. She was very tender-hearted, and tried to attend to all the appeals that came to her. Of course she broke down under the strain. Mrs. Cleveland does not interfere in any way with the letters of this character that are addressed to her, and most of them she does not even see. They receive attention, if at all, from her amanuensis. There is one kind of office-seekers who rarely trouble the wives of officials. They are pretty girls, who prefer to exert their influence on the husbands themselves. Yet, if they only realized it, a pretty woman, with an unhappy tale, if she is really good and true, is just the one to engage a woman's sympathy and enlist her efforts.

The infants Eulalie has thrown an etiquette bombshell into the camp of committeemen, for her reception in the United States, and it is learned from an authentic source that the infants has sent word that she will not stop at the Hotel Waldorf and occupy rooms formerly occupied by a subject. In fact, she refuses to be quartered in the same hotel, much less occupy rooms vacated by the duke of Veragua. The members of the committee are in a quandary now to know where to get suitable accommodations. The infants is very particular, and such petty methods as these to make her royalty stand out stiff, like a hoop-skirt, should be frowned down by the citizens of the United States, who are all kings, as well as subjects.

News of fresh bank failures comes almost daily from the cities of the Middle West, where the conditions of extended credit, dependent upon renewal of loans at short intervals, are more prevalent than in the east. This is new proof of that constriction of credit, due to impaired faith in the enduring soundness of our national currency, which is the most conspicuous and alarming feature of the present situation. This constriction and distrust may be relied upon to continue so long as silver purchases continue and to bear growing fruitage of business failures.—Oregonian.

SPEED LESSENS DANGER.

With Proper Construction and Equipment Fast Trains May Be Safest.

It may be said that in constantly demanding more rapid facilities of travel people invite a corresponding increase of the rate of danger to be encountered; but, according to a writer in the Engineering Magazine, it is very doubtful if this proposition can be maintained. The facts go to prove, rather, that faster trains develop more care on the part of the railroad people, and that there is really little, if any, more liability to accidents on such accounts. As a rule the "Wild Irishman" and "Cannon Ball" trains run on schedules so arranged as to insure the utmost degree of safety, so far as all ordinary contingencies are concerned. Their success depends largely upon this point, and the railroad companies well understand that they cannot afford to take any avoidable risk. The demand for increased speed carries with it the demand for increased prudence. Fast trains must have men of superior skill and caution to operate them; they must have good permanent way to move upon, and they must be provided with all known appliances for security and comfort. The general effect, in short, is to improve the railroad system in all respects, and to eliminate from it the carelessness and incompetency that would be a source of fixed peril under the slowest of fixed time schedules. There must always be more or less danger on a railroad train, but it is by no means sure that anything is gained in the way of safety by taking a train which runs twenty miles an hour instead of one which goes five times as rapidly. On an English railway a high rate of speed is maintained, and this, when kept at a regular rate, unchanged by numerous stops, is found to be safer than the slower rate, stopping often and subjecting machinery to concussions and jerks in starting and stopping, which disorder parts of the train more than is done by the uniform velocity of high speed. The writer has covered the space of five miles at the rate of seventy miles an hour, and, notwithstanding this extraordinary speed, there was an entire absence of oscillation. So far as any motion of the cars was concerned, it was impossible to tell whether they were going at the rate of seventy miles an hour or twenty. The multiplication of fast trains therefore is a thing to be commended and encouraged, and the railroad authorities are wise to make them as fast as they can within reasonable limits of forethought and precaution.

WINANS

THE NEW TOWN has been platted on the old camp ground, at the Forks and Falls of Hood river, with large slightly lots, broad streets and alleys, good soil, pure cold water and shade in profusion, perfect drainage, delightful mountain climate, the central attraction as a mountain summer resort and for all Oregon, being the nearest town to Mt. Hood. It is also unparalleled as a manufacturing center, being the natural center for 100 square miles of the best cedar and fir timber, possessing millions of horse power in its dashing streams and waterfalls, easily harnessed. Where cheap motive power exists, there the manufacturing will center, surrounded by soil and climate that cannot be excelled anywhere for fruit and agriculture, and with transportation already assured you will find this the place to make a perfect home or a paying investment.
