A LAST RESORT.

An Operation is Performed Upon Hank Vaughan.

A surgical operation was performed today for the relief of Hank Vaughan. Dr. Kenneth McKenzie, of Portland, who stands high in the medical profession, was telegraphed Friday by the patient's relatives, and arrived this morning.

A consultation was afterward held, and an operation decided upon as the only means of saving the injured man's life. It began at 11 o'clock this forenoon at the Transier House, and was performed with care and skill by Dr. McKenzie, assisted by Drs. Smith and Guyon, of this city. Three hours were consumed in the task. The patient lay in the stupor that has marked his condition for some time past, and was doubtless mercifully relieved to a large extent, from pain.

LATER.—Hank C. Vaughan died last evening at Pendleton. When a boy he resided in The Dalles.—East Oregonian.

How to Pack Exhibits.

The following instructions have been received from the floral department of the horticultural society for publication:

Have roses cut on the evening of the 20th inst. Leave as long stems as possible and pack each rose separate, perfectly dry in paper. After the roses are wrapped, pack same in a wooden box and take to Wells, Fargo Express, where we will call for them as soon as they arrive and treat same.

Should you send any potted plants for exhibition, which we hope, take a flat box, as high as pots of respective plants are, pack pots solid in moss, or in other words put your plants into said box and have moss put between the pots so that pots cannot move; then nail two strips of wood on the sides as long as the plants, nail another piece of wood across and tack cheese cloth over it.

Third Regiment Election.

An election was held at the Armory last evening for the purpose of electing two majors for the regiment, which was presided over by Capt. H. E. Mitchell, Brigade Quartermaster. The close of the election revealed the fact that Lieut. John S. Booth of the Dalles, and Captain W. S. Bowers of Baker City, were chosen majors. The Third Regiment are to be complimented on their wise selection. As for Major Booth, we congratulate him for the honors conferred upon him by his comrades.

COMMENCEMENT DAY.

St. Mary's Academy and Wasco Independent Academy Exercises.

Commencement day—that event of the year which is the acme of interest to an entire community, of pride alike to pupils, parents and faculty—the auspicious hour when class associations are severed, and those who have acquired the sum of knowledge volunteered by the academical societies stand upon the threshold of a mature life to battle with the world, equipped with that education and discipline pertaining thereto! The event is solemn as well as joyous, and its pathos is not hid by the bold decorations of vine and flower and the wealth of perfume of countless roses.

Two of our highest and noblest institutions yesterday launched from their friendly walls a number of human lives, who will henceforth be called upon to mould for themselves their own destiny for the future—St. Mary's Academy and the Wasco Independent Academy of The Dalles.

ST. MARY'S.

The spacious hall of St. Mary's Academy was filled long before the hour announced for the graduating exercises to commence—2 o'clock p. m. yesterday. The platform was very handsomely decorated with sprigs of tamarisk and the ilex-leaved mahonia. Every niche was occupied with a picture, beautified with vines and flowers. The chandelier was hidden with its burden of roses, and the air was fragrant with their perfume. An exquisite floral motto above the stage read "God Bless the Friends We Love." Four pianos had place upon the stage, and as the appointed hour approached for the commencement of the exercises the stage was suddenly entered by twelve young ladies in white, who seated themselves at the pianos and there burst forth such a musical welcome as fairly electrified the audience. At its conclusion they retired, leaving Miss D. Fredden upon the stage, who delivered the salutatory. In a graceful manner she welcomed the assembled guests, touching upon the love of her school associations and her tutors, and the inestimable value of the lessons taught in all that goes to make pure and noble womanhood.

Retiring, the stage was filled with the pupils of all ages, who rendered the vocal solo "Visions of Home."

"Cultivation of Literary Taste," was the subject of a remarkably forcible essay by Miss F. Lewis, one of the graduates, who chose for her subject one of those which has been widely discussed by the press and pulpit, relating to the evil effects upon the mind of cheap literature. For the proper cultivation of literary taste she dilated upon the necessity of providing good literature for children. By far the greater share of that now recklessly distributed and carelessly allowed to be within reach by parents and guardians tends to ruin the memory and impair all the mental faculties.

An instrumental solo was next rendered entitled "William Tell," a melodious selection calling for great dexterity upon the piano.

Miss L. M. Hinton, a graduate, next read "Echoes," that being the subject of her essay. It abounded in interest, and after reciting some of the remarkable instances in nature, and relating a pretty myth accepted for truth by the barbarians as to what makes the echo, drew therefrom the truism that since every object in nature has an echo, and every echo a voice, so it is with regard to human actions.

Gossip in pantomime by the minims was one of the most interesting and amusing performances on the program. Twenty little girls of about 8 years of age, dressed in Quaker costume, marched upon the stage to music, and after going through the most graceful and intricate evolutions imaginable, finally brought up in twos at short distances apart, when the pantomime began. The little ones imitated perfectly in action, and in perfect unison, the whispered comments of the gossip, and the gestures of deprecation consequent upon the receipt of such startling remarks.

Miss D. Fredden, a graduate, chose for her essay "The Industry of Genius." She said that there is no great genius without perseverance and continued industry. Many common incidents that might lead to great results occur in the lives of everyone, said the speaker, which pass unobserved. Speaking of the greatest inventions, she declared that they had been accomplished only through tireless effort, which was demanded quite as much as was original genius. She concluded with the remarkable statement that genius is only common sense intensified.

After an instrumental solo, Miss G. A. Laner, also a graduate, read an essay entitled "Heroism in Home Life." Her remarks throughout were indicated by her text. Citing Semiramis, Joan of Arc and Napoleon as examples of the world's great heroes, she found that instances of heroism in every day life were by no means uncommon. Heroism did not belong solely to the warrior, but was found in home life every day, no less great because unrecorded.

"Tans Jubal," an instrumental duet, followed. "Columbia's Triumph" was the title of a dialogue of patriotic interest, being an allegorical production representing the nations discussing among themselves the question of attending the world's fair. Haughty England was well taken by Miss Fredden, whose advice was sought and seemed to be a pattern for the other nations. While yet in discussion, Columbia, personated by Miss Lewis, appeared on the scene with her thirteen colonies, represented by little girls. After a trial of wit, though hard hit by some of the others, especially China, they all pass under the American flag singing "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean." This was one of the most successful performances of the afternoon.

An instrumental solo followed entitled "La Corbeille de Roses." This was followed by "Twinkling Star," a song by the little ones, who were remarkably well trained, and whose childish voices in concert, accompanied by their inimitable gestures with their fingers, were really irresistible.

Graduating honors were then conferred upon Miss F. Lewis, Miss G. A. Laner, Miss L. M. Hinton and Miss D. Fredden, each receiving a diploma and medal.

Miss Laner then gave the valedictory, which was most affecting, relating to the severance of the loving ties formed while within the walls of St. Mary's Academy, the kindly instruction and thoughtfulness of the sisters; spoke of the lessons learned in all that appertains toward making noble, virtuous and aspiring lives, and referred to the coming departure of Father Bronsgeest. Mr. Bronsgeest responded in fitting language, saying that in his absence his mind would often revert to St. Mary's Academy and his interest in it for eleven years, and to this graduating class especially, since the last impressions are always the most vivid. After a farewell song, the assemblage dispersed and the graduates received congratulations.

W. I. A. COMMENCEMENT.

Probably the newly-dedicated Baptist church will never again be taxed to the extent it was last night to contain the hundreds of people who assembled to listen to the commencement exercises of the Wasco Independent Academy—certainly not until next year. The aisles were filled with chairs, and every available foot of space was utilized for seats. And then a vast number of people stood up throughout the long evening, their interest remaining unabated to the end. The walls around the platform were girdled with the beautiful foliage of the state flower, the ilex-leaved mahonia, among whose leaves were fastened in prodigal abundance the beautiful roses which grow here. The arch back of the pulpit was festooned with flowers and from the center suspended a hammock, literally covered with flowers. On either side were terraces of syringas. From side to side of the building was the motto of the class, made of marguerites, the class flower, and reading "Non solum esse, sed esse nobile," meaning, "Not only to be, but to be noble."

The exercises opened with a duet by Miss Lang and Miss Newman, a very musical selection entitled "Walzer Capricien."

N. H. Gates next gave the oration "Three Perils," a grand speech, remarkable alike for its logical reasoning in clear-cut sentences, its comprehensive grasp of present political conditions affecting the life of the nation, and its bold delivery. The effort was generally conceded to be far beyond the young
