HER WANDERINGS STORY OF

Was in The Dalles July 12th and Spirited Away Four Hours Before Her Father's Arrival.

Valuable secrets are ofttimes within plain observation. It is only that so many people, busied in various pursuits, acquire the habit of closing their eyes to everything around them that crime is so often unsuspected when the makers are right at hand.

A bright sunny-haired prattler only 6 years old, the idol of her parents, was STOLEN BY GYPSIES, And only six months later, was found living in the heart of a thickly populated residence portion of The Dalles. The little one shrank from the home-coming of the man, alleged to be her father, and went neglected by the alleged mother. It was noticed by the neighbors that she bly replied in German. ABOUT HER CAPTORS.

They were a band of gypsies, about 25 in number, who have for a score of years operated throughout the northwest. They generally divided in bands consisting of about 2 to 4 men, 2 to 3 women and 5 to 8 children. No one party is together long, but shuffle themselves together like cards, to be again scattered in small parties. It is probably an undoubted fact that everyone in the state of Oregon has seen some or all of these at different times. Now if anyone had taken notice that these gypsies were all dark complexioned and heavy set, that this little girl was a decided blonde, slight build, and quick of movement, they could not have helped coming to the conclusion that the two were no more allied than oil and water.

Such is the fact. In this case the girl was

ALMA GLADYS MILLER. Stolen from Summerville, and the gypsies relied successfully upon the universal indifference and carelessness of people to protect them in the keeping of their stolen treasure. Like a bloodhound her father has kept upon the trail, now nearing her, again diverging, but if he had been possessed of the intormation within reach of 2,500 he could have folded her to his breast long ago. IN THE DALLES.

On the 10th day of July D. D. Garrison came into the CHRONICLE office, saying he had found Miller's little child, and his description of her, tallying with the published one, a telegram was sent Mr. Miller at Summerville informing him of the fact and asking for instruchold them all until he could arrive with a warrant. Contrary to the instructions crimes less frequent.

Ask your distortion for the posting people upon the habits of gypsies and render their great crimes less frequent.

Use Mexical and against the advice of those whom he had entrusted with the secret, he did not do so, but kept so close a watch upon the gypsy camp, which was about a mile above the city, that they

Garrison claimed in justification of his actions that he supposed he could put his finger upon them at any time. but like the Irishman's flea, he found that just as he was prepared to sally down upon them with all the brilliant and daring abandon of an Old Slouth, rescue the child and restore her to the arms of a heart-broken father, they were not there. His brilliant proclivities as a detective were further tarnished by his statement that he saw the gypsy woman and child fooling around the depot about train time, but did not wait to see if they took the train or not.

The father must have been both disgusted and discouraged, but gave no principal. sign if such was the case, but with that remarkable persistence which has characterized his actions from the start, White Salmon. kept eyes and ears alert for further clues. He covered the surrounding son came up from Portland on the Regcounties on horseback, and mailed scores of letters apprising officers of the facts The Dalles he visited the house where the gypsies were encamped and found pieces of the dress and drawers of the little girl which he identified as those belonging to her.

A week ago he received a telegram from the postmaster at Summerville to Wash. 'go to Heber, Utah, immediately." He wrote THE CHRONICLE that the information was not sufficient, and that he believed it was Robert Sherlock's little girl, instead of his own.

While at The Dalles, when flood, on account of my husband being it was believed a clue had been found of the gypsies leaving over the Barlow road, he said he wanted to go alone. Pressed for his reasons it was gathered that he wanted to wreak upon the child's captors a terrible vengeance, and wipe out in blood the score between them. He could scarcely be blamed, for most should be buried than that they should be brought up in a life of social and moral death. He also stated that if they were ever caught he wanted them to be taken to Union county for trial,
