It was the first intimation the unfortunate woman had received that her paramour had a wife, She upbraided and threatened him as only a scorned woman can, and then it was that the scoundrel sent for Bacigalupi and Taylor and turned her over to their tender mercies.

FOUND DEAD.

On January 2, 1892, a few days after her arrival at Callao, the woman was found dead in her apartments at the Hotel Maury, by a physician who had been summoned to attend her by Dockendorf, Bacigalupi and Taylor. The trio claimed that they had called to pay their respects to Mrs. Lewis, and that Death in South America of a Former in the course of a general conversation she suddenly complained of feeling ill and threw herself upon the divan. Finding that they could afford her no LOVED NOT WISELY BUT TOO WELL relief, they quickly sent for a doctor, but she died before he arrived. So the physician made a superficial diagnosis of the case, and signed a certificate to the effect that heart disease was the cause of death. STORY WITH A MORAL. An Oregonian Who Contributed to Democratic Success in Want. Washington, Aug. 9. - A pathetic story comes from Chicago. The other day as an Oregonian was walking down one of the streets of the world's fair city he saw a figure on a box. It had a familiar red head, and he touched it. Up it sprang. "For God's sake," it exclaimed, "don't say you saw me here. My money stopped and I am clerking in this shoe store at $8 a week, trying to get money enough to return home." The statement was confirmed by the proprietor as to situation and salary. The man who was selling shoes at $8 per week had contributed $20,000 to democratic success, and with other patriots had come to Washington for the reward, applying for an office worth probably $15,000 a year. He failed, like thousands of others, and started on the tramp homeward. He spent as much every day in Washington as he is now earning every week in Chicago. There is a moral to the story which young men in search of office might heed.

Sister. HUNTINGTON, L. I., Aug. 10 .- Mise Anna Thurston, a 17-year-old daughter of William Thurston, of this place, was drowned yesterday while trying to save her two young sisters, Cornelia and Elizabeth. They went to the harbor for their regular morning bath. Cornelia stepped into deep water and Anna went to her assistance. Cornelia grabbed Anna by the neck and ecrambled up on her back. Anna struck out for the shore, but sank. The streams of Elizabeth attracted attention and Cornelia was pulled out. Anna's body was found on the bottom.
