Robbing the Producers at Home.

The great meat monopoly of the Northwest has reduced the price of stock so low that the growers, particularly energetic sheep men, find it more profitable to ship their stock and pay the heavy freight 2,000 miles to Chicago than it is to sell to the home concern. The information is at hand that within the last six weeks several train-loads have been shipped from Pendleton and seven from The Dalles. The total number of sheep shipped to Chicago from The Dalles has been about 25,000, at an average profit of about $3,500 per train load. S. B. Barker, of Condon, expects to ship about 3,000 head to Chicago, starting in about ten days. It will require thirteen cars to ship this number. With the price of stock so low here one would naturally expect to find the price of cured meats correspondingly low, but such is not the fact. The eastern cured meats come into active competition with that of home concern after paying enormous freights from Chicago to this place. In other words it is cheaper to raise stock and ship it to Chicago, have it killed and cured and then shipped back, paying freight both ways than it is to kill and cure it at home. There is a large field in the Northwest for a packing establishment to run on a reasonable basis, and we are glad to know that one of the large establishments of Chicago are now gathering information that will help them in building up such a business. The late flurry in Chicago will probably delay operations to some extent, but it is only a question of time when there will be another concern.—Pacific Farmer.

Miss Nichols' Adventure.

From the mother of Mollie Nichols, who was in town yesterday, we learn further particulars concerning her disappearance. While riding after stock, she came upon a band of horses belonging to another party, and volunteered her assistance to help corral them across the river. While doing so one broke away. She mounted a horse which was not used to her, and riding near where a mowing machine was at work, the horse became frightened either at the machine or her fluttering skirt, and threw her violently. She lost consciousness and was taken to the house of Mr. Davis, where she did not revive for fourteen days, her identity being unknown to them. When she regained her senses she found that from the waist down she was temporarily paralyzed. She told the necessary facts about herself and was soon afterward removed to her home. At the present writing she is as well as ever.

An Incipient Blaze.

A lamp exploded in Louis Heppner's house last evening, the liberated oil burning a hole in the carpet. The alarm bell was rung, but there was no occasion for their services on reaching the scene. Shortly afterward parties on the street noticed flames within the house of Mrs. Nolan, next to Maier & Benton's grocery store. Mrs. Nolan was watching the first fire and had set a candle near the curtains. The wind blew the flame upon them and they caught fire. Those noticing the flames tried to get in the house to extinguish them, but she, supposing them to be burglars, would not let them in. They finally beat the door open, made their way to the room in which was the fire and extinguished it, much to the surprise of Mrs. Nolan.

A GOODLY HERITAGE.

What I. N. Day, Jr., Sees in the Possibilities of Wasco County.

I. N. Day, jr., was in town last evening. He is a very pleasant and brainy young man, about 23 years old, and a conversation with him developed the fact that he is prone to investigate any subject under his notice with circumspection and ability, and always "knows what he is talking about."

Like everyone else visiting our country, given to observation, he has been greatly struck with our exceptional facilities for fruit raising, and, speaking of the fruit itself, said it is more solid, more spicy, richer, has less sugar in it, is firmer and will stand shipment better than any fruit he ever saw, that it far exceeds California fruit. As for himself he would ask nothing better than forty acres of cherry trees in Wasco county—100 acres would suit him better.

"It is surprising," said Mr. Day, "that people are here who raise wheat when the land will yield $200 or $300 net from fruit. How much will that farm produce?" he asked, pointing to a field of wheat about three miles distant from town. He was told that the average profit did not exceed $4 or $5 per acre, and he said: "Two cherry trees will do better than that."

"You do not need rain in the summer time. All you have to do is to cultivate the soil, keep it stirred, and the yield will be abundant. I observe what I believe to be another good thing, that is, heading the trees low; that is a good plan in a dry climate." Mr. Day was informed that was the reason that we did not trellis our grapes; that by cutting them off they spread over the surface of the ground, keeping it moist and cool, appropriated the sunlight for their own growth; and that last year 1,000 pounds of grapes was gathered from a single vine.

Continuing in the same strain, Mr. Day said: "With the proper amount of energy this should be the San Jose of Oregon. The old pioneers do not appreciate what they have. Many of them have made scarcely any effort to improve their land, but the time is coming when this order of things will pass away. New people will take their places, and make this the most valuable country in the Northwest."

Under New Management.

The Oregon Blade made its appearance yesterday under the management of A. C. McClelland, the biggest editor in Oregon, he tipping the scales at 246 pounds. His size will doubtless serve him well, and what a "surprise party" it will prove for the unfortunate callers of the gang, so fond of that popular pastime of "licking an editor!" Wrathily Individual—"Is the editor in?" Editor—"Yes, sir; I am the man." W. I.—W-e-l-l, put my name down for a year's subscription.—Democrat.
