Fatal Outcome of the Sham Battle at Camp Compson.

HIS VERTEBRA WAS SHATTERED

A Pall of Gloom Cast Upon the City of Tents---How the Guardsmen Received the News.

PORTLAND, Or., Aug. 21.-Lieut Chas. E. Nelson, the young officer of company A, First regiment, O. N. G., who was wounded in Saturday's sham conflict at Camp Compson, died at 3:30 p. m. vesterday at the Good Samaritan hospital. City Physician Wheeler held an autopsy on the body last evening, and found that the gunwad had entered the back just above the kidneys, made a hole a quarter of an inch in diameter and had fractured the two last lumbar vertebræ. Particles of the vertebra were found in the abdominal cavity, which was filled with blood. The flesh was badly powder-burnt. The intestines were not injured. When Dr. Wheeler discovered that the two lumbar vertebrae, which are among the heaviest bones of the body, were fractured, he decided that they had been struck by a bullet, and he made a two hours' search for the missile, which brought no result, and he was forced to abandon his theory. The fragment of the wad was then presented to several militiamen for examination, and they decided that it was a part of a blank cartridge. It was too thick, they said, to be a part of a loaded cartridge, the wad of which was comparatively thin. Dr. Wheeler opined from the powder marks on the flesh that the gun was held very close to or against the body. The compact felt wad was driven directly against the two lumbar vertebræ, which were broken by the concussion. While the sudden death of Lieutenant Nelson was totally unexpected by the troops at Camp Compson, it was known to a few of the staff officers that his con-238 J. FOLCO At right side dition was critical. Surgeon Macrum and his assistant, Dr. Jefferds, sat by their patient all of Saturday night and did all in their power to relieve his pain. The wound was probed twice during the night, with the idea of ascertaining whether a ball might not have caused the wound, but in each case the surgeons became more convinced that the wound itself was merely superficial. The patient's symptoms indicated, rather, that the brain matter had become disturbed by injury to the nervous system. About 3 o'clock in the morning a sinking spell came on, but soon afterward the patient rallied and ceased to suffer pain. Surgeon Macrum at once decided that his patient ought to have better care than could be afforded him in camp, so a special car was secured and he was removed to the Good Samaritan hospital in this city. The car left the camp at 11 a. m. and the trip was made without any seemingly disastrous results to the sufferer. For two hours after his arrival at the hospital the dying lieutenant lay in a comatose state, and then passed quietly away. The only persons present at his deathbed were Dr. Jefferds and House Surgeon Buckley, Surgeon Macrum having been forced to return to his duties at camp a short time before. Surgeon Macrum thinks that death was caused by the shock of the rifle discharge, superinduced by the intense degree of excitement under which the unfortunate officer must have been laboring at the time.

Divine services at Camp Compson were just drawing to a close when a courier handed a dispatch to Colonel Beebe, and when the colonel arose to read it his grave demeanor told more plainly than words of the misfortune that had befallen the regiment. The colonel's voice was husky, and when he resumed his seat he covered his face to conceal his emotion. The boys of company A cried and sobbed like children, while their fellow guardsmen were scarcely less affected. When the first bitter wave of grief had passed, Dr. wrapper. Stratton, who was leading the services, delivered an eloquent prayer. The doxology was then sung and the assemblage Charles Hotel, ology was then sung and the assidismissed with the benediction.

Those who had remained in camp were informed of the sad event by the lowering of the regimental colors to This old, popular and reliable house has been entirely refurnished, and every room has been repapered and repainted and newly carpeted throughout. Lieutenant Nelson came to Portland about five years ago, and entered the employ of Fleckenstein & Mayer as a book-keeper. He attached himself to the National Guard soon after coming here as a private in company A, First Regiment, and by close attention to his duties worked his way up to the position of first lieutenant. His cheery manner of address and hearty good fellowship endeared him to the men of his command, as well as to all of the members of the regiment with whom he came in contact. With his brother officers he was always a favorite, and each advance he made in line of promotion was a gratification to all. Colonel Beebe looked upon him as one of the most promising officers in his command, and only waited an opportunity to reward him according to his de-

He has chosen for the text of his speech the sentence, "Sound money cheats nobody," and it is understood that he will avow himself the friend of bimetalism, while gladly voting for a repeal of the WASHINGTON, Aug. 20 .- It is the expectation of the free-coinage men in the house that, whatever be the result of the various votes on repeal, conditional a short time, pass Voorhees' bill to increase the volume of national banknotes and send the measure to the house for its concurrence. People who expect the house to adopt this proposition in toto and with promptitude are likely to be disappointed. It will give rise to prolonged debate, and the silver men are preparing to meet the Voorhees bill with an even more liberal proposition. They propose a measure which, instead of swelling the national bank currency $19,000,000, as contemplated by the Regulator, and am a well man. Voorhees bill, would increase this circulation $58,000,000, and at the same time satisfy the demands of a strong element of the American people by making it impossible for the national banks to increase or diminish at will the volume of circulating currency.

The meetings were called generally as requested. Most of them were held this afternoon. Resolutions were adopted and forwarded by wire to the Kansas congressmen, demanding the enactment of a free-coinage act on a ratio of 16 to 1. Some of the meetings, taking the cue from the Advocate, the official paper, incorporated in the resolutions a demand for the impeachment of J. G. Carlisle for failing to purchase the required number of ounces of silver during July, as required by the Sherman law. The meetings were attended almost entirely by populists. The republicans who favor free coinage declined to participate, for party reasons.
