The light, northeast wind that has prevailed for the last three or four days has kept the smoke back on the west side of the mountains until today, when it veered round into the northwest and west, bringing with it a dense volume, which has almost obscured the sun, and the atmosphere is so thick with it that it is becoming uncomfortable with its strong smell.

An Expensive Ditch Completed.

The first water flowed to the termination of the new ditch of the Hood River Water Supply Co., just completed, last Friday night. The ditch is ten miles long, dug the entire distance, with the exception of about three rods, which is flumed. Those who have had the impression that that country is so fearfully broken up will readily see that there is considerable level land there. The flume is 4 feet wide at the top, 2 feet at the bottom and 20 inches deep. The water is taken out of Dead Point creek, and does not appreciably lessen the supply. One thousand inches of water now runs into the ditch, but the wearing away of the sides will continually increase its capacity.

The Regulator will make a trip to the Cascade Locks on Sunday the 3d inst., to bring up the firemen. To those wishing to make the trip, a rate of $1 will be made. The steamer will leave The Dalles at 9 a. m., and returning, leave the Locks at 2 p. m.

The Recorder and the Tramp.

The recorder, as police judge, has a good opportunity to study human nature, and Mr. Dufur finds a field calling for the acutest discrimination in dealing with the tramp element. He is learning to distinguish between the professional loafer and the merely unfortunate, without funds, stranded on a strange shore. The veteran generally has a nice fairy story fixed up, but in the telling of it he invariably lays himself "wide open," and then it is the youthful judge finds keenest pleasure in reducing his theory to a condition, and he is made to see the force of the complaint:

"O what a tangled web we weave, When first we practice to deceive."

The average tramp is not a success as a liar. He lacks genius. He is a fox, but never an owl. He disproves the proverb, "A standing gatepost begets no wisdom," if by that is meant diplomacy is to be acquired by travel. The full force of its opposite, however, is realized: "A rolling stone gathers no moss." Precious little "moss" is ever visible in the inventory of a tramp's possessions.

Yesterday a young Swede about 21 years old paraded up and down the street in search of a marshal. He was well dressed, intelligent, but without money and hungry. He wanted a meal, and said he wanted to deal with the authorities and not go to begging of citizens. He saw Officer Gibbons, who treated him as he does all tramps, and his case came up before the recorder this morning. He told a straightforward story, of how he had work part of the time, and part of the time idle, and that it was a custom of eastern cities for the hungry to appeal to the municipal authorities, who furnished them food. The recorder saw in this man not a tramp, but a man of misfortune, and discharged him with the customary injunction to "get out of town as soon as possible."

A Father's Views.

MR. EDITOR—I notice in your paper an article in reference to two young ladies. I fully agree with you in trying to protect and save these thoughtless ones from disgrace, and by the example of manhood and womanhood, lead them to a nobler type of life; carry them out upon the ocean of integrity, where they may be taught to shun the whirlpool of vice, that they may not get into the untiring jaws of these social sharks, vampires who seek to destroy the noblest element in womanhood.

One of these I know, and by her actions believed her to be very reserved, and am satisfied that she is the dupe of another. Therefore, Mr. Editor, you did not put the blame where it belonged. Have you no reproof for the men who led the thoughtless into this repulsive scheme? One word from one of these men would have been sufficient to have stopped the whole affair, and he would have had the gratitude of the better element of this community. We must hold our fellowmen responsible in proportion to their ability to avert wrong. We admire in our fellow men a disposition to protect the innocent and lift the fallen.

If it is this element, imbibed into our life, that holds us together as a community and a government, and without it we must go to pieces. Hence, the individual who does not observe this law is an enemy, and should be treated as such. We call the man a thief who enters our store, breaks into our safe and steals of us our money; the man that takes our life we call a murderer. In the first case the money can be restored or more earned, and everything move on the same. In the second, the elements we most admire still live, for the dead are not robbed of character. These men have a place that society may be protected. But what shall we call the man, and where shall we put him, who attempts to rob womanhood of that which he can never restore—rob her of everything we admire in her character? Shorn of the noblest, grandest gem of her existence. The worst thief is the one who steals that which he cannot return, and should be ostracised for social protection. A FATHER.
