Archie Kincaid was hunting near La Camas with his brother-in-law, Bart Elbon, and was shot by the latter, who saw something moving through the brush and took it for a pheasant. Kincaid was shot in the left breast and arm. It is thought none of the shot penetrated to any vital part.

Three children of Jacob Wetle were playing with powder near Mill creek bridge about noon yesterday, and poured out a quantity of it on the ground from a bottle. The oldest of them ignited it with a match, while the other two were close observers. The explosion burned all three of their faces, one of them seriously in the eyes. Dr. Hollister was called, who attended to their injuries, and it is believed they will escape permanent disfigurement or injury.

A communication to the Oregonian from S. H. Greene gives the name to the peculiar fish caught here. He says the species is known to the Russians as the "gorbuscha," whence it gets its scientific name, "Oncorhynchus Gorbuscha." English-speaking people call it generally the "hump-back salmon," and often the "dog salmon." The latter appellation is, however, incorrect, for the dog salmon is a different and distinct species. He fears also that the learned ichthyologists of the Smithsonian institution, when they receive the photograph sent will manifest a little surprise that the sportsmen of The Dalles do not readily recognize the fish.

A Cheeky Request.

The following comprehensive request from a Nebraska gentleman was received by the land office today:

"U. S. Land Office—Will you kindly send me list of lands (government) timber, mineral and agricultural, remaining unsold in your district; also price per acre, and oblige."

As there are about 800 townships, comprising 10,000 square miles, and nearly 7,000,000 acres of lands in the district, and as each township map would cost about $4, the magnitude of the request is plainly apparent, and as the letter did not enclose a check for $1,000, the spirit of the letter could not be complied with, which Mr. Lewis very much regrets.

FORTY YEARS AGO.

The Beginning of the Married Life of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Snipes.

Today marks the 40th milestone in the married lives of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Snipes. For seven years more than a generation they have traveled life's pathway as one, sharing together the pleasures and disappointments, the joys and sorrows, the fortune and adversity, incidental to human existence. While they have outlived the age of romance their lives have been full of it, and if properly written would put to blush the modern novel. Though few would suppose it now, their wooing was accompanied with much the same difficulties that nowadays are often placed in the way of true lovers. The father of pretty Martha Imbler was not so taken with the handsome appearance of the youth as was the maid herself, and had forbidden further social intercourse between them. But then as now "love laughs at locksmiths," and at 2 o'clock in the morning, just forty years ago today, the determined young man stole away the no less determined young lady from the prairie schooner in which she was supposed to be sleeping, and both came quickly to The Dalles and were married. They were forgiven, as all children are under similar circumstances, and when they settled on a farm about two miles west of the town, the "old folks" were among the most frequent of visitors. Here Mr. Snipes has every year since 1854 plowed the soil, cultivated the crops and gathered the harvests; here fourteen children were born; here three of the number were borne to the silent grave; and here they are living today, as devoted after forty years of a life changeful as the kaleidoscope, as when hand in hand they began life's journey with vows of eternal constancy fresh upon their lips. In the light of so rare an experience who can deal in frivolities upon so sacred a subject as matrimony, or gibe with careless nonchalance upon the marital tie. Mr. and Mrs. Snipes are now the "old folks." Fortune has rewarded them for their lives of privation, danger and toil, they live to see their children in the vigor of manhood and womanhood, and now in the lengthening shadows of the afternoon of life, yet strong in health and spirits, honored and eminently respectable, they may review their life in retrospect with few regrets for the past and a hope for the future grounded upon honesty, forbearance, charity and every Christian virtue.

FUN FOR LITTLE JAPS.

Street Venders Go About with Charcoal Stoves on Which Children Bake Cakes.

Japan has been frequently referred to as the "Children's Paradise," and with considerable justice, for in no other country is childhood made so much of, and are children surrounded by so many devices for their amusement. In every town, according to Dr. W. D. Eastlake in the Popular Science Monthly, there are numbers of street venders and hawkers whose sole customers are children.

One class of these venders carry two charcoal stoves, or furnaces, swung in the conventional manner of the country from the ends of a pole which rests across the shoulder. Arriving at a convenient corner, the load is put down, and a group of eager children quickly gather. For the moderate sum of one or two rin the children are supplied with a tiny cup of sweetened batter and a spoon. Thus equipped, they proceed to bake their own cookies on the smooth iron top of the stoves, fashioning the dainties into whatever shape they please, and when they are crisp and brown, devouring them. The same vender also devotes his skill to children. His "stock in trade" consists of dried reeds and a quantity of midzu ame, a sort of malt paste. Some of the same is put on the end of a reed and is molded or blown into some fantastic shape by the vender. The young customer dictates as to the figure, and butterflies, flowers, grounds, or what-not are shaped from the sweet paste. The children, after having satisfied their taste for artistic design, eat the finished work, the reed handle preventing their fingers from becoming sticky.

There is another of the child amusements that can be seen in the streets of Tokio or any other Japanese city. This artisan molds fruits, flowers and vegetables from colored rice-flower dough, and does his work so deftly that it is really difficult to distinguish the artificial from the real fruit.

This universal love and regard for children is also displayed at every temple festival, where numerous booths, gay with toys, flags and games, form always a prominent feature.
