THE HUNGER FOR LAND.

country lying west of the Missouri river was embraced within the public domain. arable land was as free as the water in the streams that coursed across it. The supply seemed inexhaustible, and the government found it necessary to hold out special inducements to lure settlers into the farther west, in the Pacific Northwest going so far as to denote 640 acres to a single settler and his wife. Today we have the exciting spectacle of nearly 200,000 people racing and struggling to acquire a reserve just thrown open to entry. And the land in this reserve is of a character that few would have taken a quarter of a century ago.

Out of this spectacle little can be drawn that is not tinged with a melancholy aspect. If the arable land is not quite exhausted, the time is certainly Of Des Moines, lows, writes under date of near when it will be. A government which has given with lavish hand for S. B. MED. Mrg. A nation which has never known landed want, which has stimulated and fostered the moving and developing spirit of its surplus population and its border elements, can not face right about to the conditions long ruling three doses each week. in Europe without suffering inconvenience and trouble. The United States having long fostered the land-seeking appetite must now expect to encounter some distress 'in dealing with that appetite. Either immigration must be checked, the people educated to acceptance of the changed conditions, or the prevailing system of land tenure will have to be modified or revolutionized. The American spirit is not a transt spirit. It craves a free landed fitle, and to satisfy that craving will hardly quibble at an undertaking having for its purpose restrictions upon the éwnership of land. The upon the ownership of land. The silver, but all that had been previously minted was left untouched and continued to circulate as before, and no one was alarmed about it because there was no danger of undue inflation. The conditions have been very different under the operations of the Sherman purchase act, which was adopted to stay the tide of free silver. Silver has not been demonetized and never will be. Neither can it be endowed with a fictitious value.

In view of the fact that state warrante. drawing eight per cent. interest, are now selling at a discount of five per cent. and upon the holder of the warrant, who must lose the five per cent, the Salem Independent urges that a receiver be appointed for the state. That paper believes the funds of the state are manipulated by the treasurer so as to secure large profits, and wants a bill introduced at the next legistature to loan out the state money to the highest responsible bidder among the banks, the interest to be paid in cash. The Independent finds no fault with the treasurer, finding for him a sufficient excuse in the fact that his malary is only half what it should be, but wants the salary raised to $1,800 a year and the state's money loaned out at the best possible interest.
