An exchange says it's a wise stock that knows its own par—just now.

Before our American editors abolish the English house of lords they should practice a while on the United States senate.

Forest fires in Wisconsin are said to cover over 200 square miles, and nearly $5,000,000 worth of standing pine has been destroyed. Hundreds of homes have been destroyed and families made destitute by the fire.

When the glamour of newness wears itself out a little the Cherokee strip will be peopled by an industrious and intelligent body of men, the sharks, thieves and gamblers will be eliminated, and the country will rank alongside of the older parts of the commonwealth.

Pension Commissioner Lochren's annual report shows that there are nearly a million pensioners on the rolls, the exact figures being 966,012, and a net increase during the year of $9,944. If all of these are securing pensions worthily, there can be few left who deserve one.

How softly and imperceptibly summer glides into autumn! A single day carries us over from the hot indolence of August into the cool, tranquil repose of September; and then, though the heated days may return, the irrevocable step has been taken, and we are in the realm of early autumn, which Keats called so aptly, "season of mists and mellow fruitfulness."

From a London letter the following is gleaned about the English house of lords: "It was to be expected that the feebleness of age would be prominent in such a house. It was not that. It was the senility of youth, the wreck of middle life, the tottering imbecility of dissipated age that stood out all over the picture. The presence of such intellectual giants as Salisbury, Rosebery, and Playfair served but to furnish the contrast between hope and despair. The great majority of the puppets of inherited greatness would excite no emotions beyond pity and disgust if encountered anywhere save in such grotesque masquerading as this. English and American readers are familiar with the current caricaturing of the average British peer as a repulsive creature, with a sloping forehead and retreating chin. No general opportunity was ever offered for putting the indictment to the test; until this week. It must stand. It is abundantly proved that a composite photograph of those members of the house of lords who hold their seats by inheritance, not by appointment, would be the personification of weakness, mental, moral and physical, self-indulgence, selfishness, bigotry and intolerance."

Couldn't Look a Sheep in the Face.

A man looking for work, in Ohio, said to a farmer: "Can you give me something to do?" The farmer said he had some sheep to shear if he could find a man who knew how to do it. The man said he had learned the business and considered himself an expert. He was told to go to the barn where he would find shears; and to commence shearing. After a while the farmer went to the barn to see how the man was getting along, but to his surprise found the shearer shearing the sheep from the wrong end. The farmer said, "This will never do; you told me that you understood shearing sheep?" "Yes sir, I told you so; but, since Grover Cleveland's election and the fall in wool, I have been ashamed to look a sheep in the face."—Lima Recorder.

A Queer Little Quaker Custom.

Near the city of Philadelphia there are a few quaint old villages where Quakers and Quaker customs are to be found just as they were in the days of good old William Penn. You have no idea how odd some of these customs are. A few days ago a New York lady was traveling through one of these little villages, and being tired, she stopped at an old brick farm-house to rest. Immediately there came out a little girl, dressed all in gray, who invited her to come in the house and have a cup of tea and some cakes. When the lady had partaken of her refreshment and turned to go, she offered the old-fashioned maid in gray some candy out of a sweetmeat box which she carried at her belt.

"No, I thank thee," said the little one bashfully. "I thank thee—but no."

"Please take the candy," urged the lady. "I want to give it to you because you have been so kind to me."

For a minute the little one hesitated. She put out her hand, as if yielding to temptation, and then drew it back resolutely, as she said:

"I thank thee, no. I may not take the candy now, because when thee asked me first, if I would have some, I told thee no, and now I may not take any until thee comes some other day."

HITS AND MISSES.

PEOPLE with false teeth should grin in private.

THERE are some things a woman is more graceful at than riding a bicycle.

THE man who tells you he is sorry he can't help you would not do so if he could.

WHEN you stop to argue with a woman time must hang heavy on your hands.

MANY men can forgive and pity a thief with more ease than they can a liar.—Arkansas Traveler.

Among the incidents of childhood that stand out in bold relief, as our memory reverts to the days when we were young, none are more prominent than severe sickness. The young mother vividly remembers that it was the Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured her of croup, and in turn administers it to her own offspring and always with the best results.
