ELECTIONS IN FRANCE.

Manhood Suffrage Is Universal—Precautions Against Fraud.

In France all men when they have attained their majority are registered voters. Every one qualified is inscribed on a poll list and is armed with an electoral card—giving his name, profession and residence—which is issued by the mayor of his commune. This card is his passport of citizenship and also serves for purposes of identity. Each card is numbered and corresponds with the number on the register. The polling takes place in a townhall, schoolroom or other public building. No candidate is elected at the first ballot who does not receive at least a quarter of the votes on the register of voters, or one-half of the ballots actually cast. Failing either of these results a second ballot takes place a fortnight later, when a simple majority of votes is sufficient for election.

There is not the same strict control over expenditure on elections in France as in England. The cost of an election varies considerably. There is a great deal spent in holding public meetings, but a spirited rivalry arises sometimes over pleading. The candidates are not saddled with official expenses. The amount spent depends entirely on the strength of the opposition. Usually, when the fight is keen, the expenses of each candidate will run between ten thousand and thirty thousand francs. At the famous contest between Boulanger and Jacques in 1889 over a million francs were spent.

The French system of polling tends to insure purity of voting. When a voter enters the polling station he gives up his electoral card. The number on it is compared with the number in the register. When the identity of the voter is established his card is accepted and he is allowed to vote. Before the card is returned to him an official tears off a corner of it, which renders it useless. Other precautions are taken which render fraudulent voting extremely difficult. Election offenses, which are severely punished, are hardly possible except through collusion with the presiding officers.

THE NEW TOWN has been platted on the old camp ground, at the Forks and Falls of Hood river, with large, slightly lots, broad streets and alleys, good soil and pure water, with shade in profusion, perfect drainage, delightful mountain climate, the central attraction as a mountain summer resort for all Oregon, being the nearest town to Mt. Hood. It is unparalleled as a manufacturing center, being the natural center for 150 square miles of the best cedar and fir timber, possessing millions of horse-power in its dashing streams and water-falls, easily harnessed. Where cheap motive power exists, there the manufacturing will center, surrounded by soil and climate that cannot be excelled anywhere for fruit and agriculture, and with transportation already assured you will find this the place to make a perfect home or a paying investment.
