THE DALLES OREGON

BRIDGES IN ENGLAND.

Magnificent Spans That Illustrate the Progress of Engineering Science.

The scientific construction of great bridges in Great Britain has been studied with much diligence from earliest times, and has quite equaled the progress in the other branches of architecture. The most ancient bridge in England is the Gothic triangular bridge at Coryland, in Lincolnshire, which is said to have been built in 860, says London Tid-Bits. This singular structure has three approaches from as many roads, formed by three segments of a circle which meet in the middle and from three pointed arches.

The longest bridge in England is that over the Trent at Burton, in Staffordshire, built in the twelfth century of squared freestone. It consists of thirty-four arches and is one thousand five hundred and forty-five feet in length.

The old bridge at Newcastle-Upon-Tyne was built of stone in 1281, and that over the Medway, at Rochester, about the same time.

The London bridge was composed originally of twenty-two arches, and was incumbered for many years with a street of houses, which was removed between 1756 and 1758, and the three center arches were then converted into one of seventy-two feet span.

The bridge built over the Conway at Llanrwst, in Denbighshire, by Inigo Jones in 1630, may be classed among the best of the English bridges, although it lies in Wales. It consists of three arches, the largest of which is fifty-eight feet span. The road and the parapet are very low and the approaches steep, and the bridge has an unusually light and airy appearance.

Another beautiful and singular bridge in Wales is also worthy of notice—that built in 1746 over the Taff, in Glamorganshire, by William Edwards, an uneducated country mason. Some time after its erection it was, unfortunately, carried away by masses which the torrent of the river drove against it. As the builder had given security for the durability of his work for seven years he was compelled to erect another, which he did with all possible speed. The second bridge consisted of one arch, for the purpose of admitting freely through it whatever incumbrances the flood might bring down. The arch was completed, but before the bridge had received the parapets the weight pressed in the haunches, raised up the crown, and laid the fine arch in ruins in 1751. At the third attempt the bridge was completed and has since gallantly withstood the test of time and flood.

DULL Times makes it all the more necessary to advertise. That is what the most progressive of our business men think, and these same business men are the most prosperous at all times. If you wish to reach all the people in this neighborhood you can't do better than talk to them through the columns of the DAILY CHRONICLE. It has more than double the circulation of any other paper, and advertising in it pays big.

THE NEW TOWN has been platted on the old camp ground, at the Forks and Falls of Hood river, with large, sightly lots, broad streets and alleys, good soil and pure water, with shade in profusion, perfect drainage, delightful mountain climate, the central attraction as a mountain summer resort for all Oregon, being the nearest town to Mt. Hood. It is unparalleled as a manufacturing center, being the natural center for 150 square miles of the best cedar and fir timber, possessing millions of horse power in its dashing streams and waterfalls, easily harnessed. Where cheap motive power exists, there the manufacturing will center, surrounded by soil and climate that cannot be excelled anywhere for fruit and agriculture, and with transportation already assured you will find this the place to make a perfect home of a paying investment.
