TWO MUSICAL DOGS.

One Criticised an Orchestra and the Other Detected a Thief.

A wonderful story of a French musical critic is related by persons who profess to have been acquainted with him, and who have seen him in attendance on musical performances. He was a dog, and his name in public was Parade, whether he had a different name at home was never known. At the beginning of the French revolution he went every day to the military parade in front of the Tuilleries palace. He marched with the musicians, halted with them, listened knowingly to their performances, and after the parade disappeared, to return promptly at the parade time the next day. Gradually the musicians became attached to this devoted listener. They named him Parade, and one or another of them always invited him to dinner. He accepted the invitation, and was a pleasant guest. It was discovered that after dinner he always attended the theater, where he seated himself calmly in the corner of the orchestra and listened critically to the music. If a new piece was played he noticed it instantly and paid the strictest attention. If the piece had the melodious passages he showed his joy to the best of his dog-like ability; but if the piece was ordinary and uninteresting he yawned, stared about the theater and unmistakably expressed his disapproval.

Another very curious story of a canine musical ear is told of a London organ grinder's dog. The organ grinder was blind and aged and the dog used to lead him about. One night after a hard day's work the old man and his faithful companion lay down to sleep, with the organ beside them. They slept soundly, and when they awoke the organ was gone. They were in despair. Their means of earning a living was gone. But the dog led the old man through the streets where he had been accustomed to play, and persons who had given him alms before continued to heed him, so that the loss of the organ proved not so bad after all. Weeks went by. One day the old man heard a hand organ played a few feet from him. It reminded him of his lost instrument, but he paid no special attention to it. Hand organs were common in London and he heard them often. Not so the dog. He showed signs of great excitement, barked violently and led his master in the direction of the organ. He sprang at the robber's throat, dragged him away from the stolen organ and led his master eagerly up to it with expressions of recognition and delight.

"A Talented Editor."

During the coming months, or the heated period, those who are traveling or contemplating a trip away from home should read the following letter from a brilliant and well-known editor and provide themselves against attacks of headache and dizziness:
 GENTLEMEN—I had occasion to use several boxes of Kruse's Headache Capsules while traveling to Chicago to attend the National Democratic Convention. They acted like a charm in preventing headaches and dizziness. Have had very little headache since my return, which is remarkable. Yours respectfully,

The Only True Harrison Likes.

During the darkest days of the war, when military tunes and ballads were sung everywhere till people were about sick of them, there was played in New York, says the Press of that town, a soldier's march which was immediately popular all over the country. It was the late Charles Gounod's "The Soldiers' Chorus," from "Faust," and after a year or so America got as tired of it as it recently did of "Annie Rooney." Ex-President Harrison first heard it played by one of the army bands in Sherman's army. It is the only air he ever liked. In the case of most tunes he did not know one tune from the other, and he is probably the only person in the United States to-day who hears the "Soldiers' Chorus" played and feels inspired by it.
