THE PRESENT TARIFF.

A nomination on the next republican ticket for the presidency is equivalent to an election. There has been no doubt of this proposition ever since the last state elections when Ohio, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Iowa went so uncompromisingly republican on the tariff issue. While the fear of free trade may be worse than would be the actual reality, the reality is bad enough. At various times in the history of the nation, practical free trade has been tried and always has been attended with defeat-that is a decrease of wages, a paralyzing effect on manufactures and producers and the general demoralization of business. What wonder then that in the face of history the panic of 1893 has been so severe? When Abraham Lincoln took the presidency he found the country in a deplorable condition, not only from the general agitation upon slavery, but because of the financial policy of his democratic predecessors, which was fast driving the people to bankruptcy. For thirty years since that time the country has been prosperous. This has been under a high protective policy, and if, as our democratic friends claim, the outcome of this policy was the late financial panic, it has been a long time in manifesting itself. The question of tariff is not a question of today. It comes up for settlement about every generation, but it seems the experience must be relearned by every set of men who come upon the stage of action. These various experiences have shown that for the United States, protection is the thing, and the more prohibitive it is the better. Oregon cannot compete with Australia upon wool growing, and free wool means the death of that industry in the west. What is true of wool will apply to all raw materials dependent upon labor for their production. If we are to maintain the present American standard of wages let us have the benefit of all there is in the present

The Manchester ship canal was formally opened January 1st. This is one of the great enterprises of the world, in which millions of dollars have been expended and which will require an immense traffic to pay a profitable interest on the investment. Perhaps the greatest piece of work ever attempted in the world's history is the Panama canal, which reflects the life work of Ferdinand de Lesseps. There is such a thing as an enterprise being too large to pay, of which this is a memorable example. The cost of this canal is up in the hundreds of millions, and if every ship which now goes around the horn would pay all the tribute it could afford for the privilege of passing between the continents, the amounts received would never pay the interest on the money

A Japanese Tea Room.

Huge Japanese umbrellas are serviceable for many things, but one seen recently is so peculiarly striking as to deserve especial comment. It hangs from a hook in the ceiling of a small room in an artist's home and forms the entire ceiling. Beneath it is the tea table and all its paraphernalia, together with a bamboo settee and five chairs, all set upon a Japanese rug. The tea service is of fine Japanese ware and the ten itself comes from Japan; the entire room is complete, and one feels on entering that it is a veritable bit of the land of chrysanthemums.

Crook county has a romance which would furnish foundation for a novel that would equal some of the productions of the ablest authors were the facts all made visible to the scrutinizing gaze of the reading public. We are not writing novels, hence we can at this time only give the outlines of the romance, at the same time suppressing names. The facts are as follows:

Some nine years ago a boy appeared in Prineville, without friends and without money. No one knew from whence he came or what was his parentage. He soon found employment at different occupations by which he could and did sustain himself. Time passed along, the boy apparently grew no older, though years came and went unheeded by the youth. After several years spent in drudgery the boy finally formed the acquaintance of one-a man of mature years-in whom he could repose confidence, and to this one revealed his identity, also the fact that he was playing a dual part in life, that although men's clothing had been donned and the role of boy assumed, "he" was a lone woman who had been deserted by her the huge, old-fashioned pills. And woman who had been deserted by her husband in a strange land and penniless. The friend had a warm heart, and being alone in the world took the "boy" as a partner, and together they launched their fortunes, working when work was satisfaction, or your money is re-to be had. Finally an attachment turned. You pay only for the good stronger than mere friendship sprung you get. up between the partners, which resulted in their going into another country, procured a marriage license and being united in wedlock.

This occurred three years ago. On their return to this county, they assumed the former role of partners, the wife retaining the character of a boy. while the husband maintained the position of the head of the firm, and together they worked wherever employment was to be had. And still there are few who know or even imagine that the "boy" is any other than what "he"represents. The parties are well known and respected as upright, honorable citizens, and may for years retain the positions which they now hold without the world being the wiser, or suspicioning the sex of the supposed boy. There certainly are many wonders in this world which we poor mortals know not of.
