A SKIN MONEY STATE.

Everyone knows that among the pioneers of this country "barter" was the usually accepted medium of exchange. Coin of any kind was scarce, paper money was received with great distrust, and the settlers had to make shift with whatever substitute for money came to hand.

In those days when game was still plentiful, skins were the most available articles for this purpose. When dressed they occupied little space; they could easily be carried long distances, and they were readily exchanged at the tradingposts for ammunition and other "store goods." But it seemed very quaint that any legislature should have established a system of currency on a pelt basis, as that of the short lived state of Franklin did.

The territory now embraced in the state of Tennessee once belonged to North Carolina. The settlers in this then wild interior section fell out with the North Carolinians, and the result was that they seceded and constituted themselves into a separate state, called the state of Franklin. One of the first legislative acts of this upstart government was one reciting that "whereas the collecting of taxes in specie was oppressive to the good people of the commonwealth, the civil officials should draw their salaries in pelts." The governor was to have 1,000 deer skins a year; his secretary 500 coon skins, and each county clerk 300 beavers. The justice's fee for signing a warrant was one muskrat pelt, and the constable's for serving it, a mink skin.

The government has refused to rebate to settlers on railroad land the $1.25 per acre which was an excess of the amount now required to be paid, under the forfeiture act, and was consequently overpaid by holders of land under that act. It is an acknowledged fact that the government owes these men the $1.25 per acre which was overpaid, though there appears to be no disposition to liquidate the debt. The best plan, it appears to us, would be for the government to issue land warrants in 40, 80 and 160 acre amounts, which would be useful in lo-

A GREAT BEAR HUNTER. Five Hundred of the Animals Siain by

Gen. Wade Hampton. Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, in his "Wilderness Hunter," speaks of Gen. Wade Hampton, of South Carolina, as the man who, "with horse and hound, has been the mightiest hunter America has ever seen." His special game has been bear and deer, but he has also had the fortune to kill some sixteen cougarsthe panther of the east, the mountain lion of the west, and the lion and puma of South America. Of black beers, according to Mr. Roosevelt, he has prob-ably killed more than any other man living in the United States. Thirty or forty of these he has killed with the knife.

His plan was, when he found that the dogs had the bear at bay, to walk up close and cheer them on. They and hollow cheeks, and dull, sunken would instantly seize the bear in a eyes, don't always mean that a wobody, and he would then rush in and stab it behind the shoulder, reaching over so as to inflict the wound on the opposite side from that where he stood. He escaped seathless from all these encounters save one, in which he was rather severely torn in the forearm. Many other hunters have used the knife, but perhaps none so frequently. Gen. Hampton always hunted with large packs of hounds, managed sometimes by himself and sometimes by his negro hunters. He occasionally took out forty dogs at a time. He found that all his dogs together could not kill a big, iat bear, but they occasionally killed three-year-olds, or lean and poor bears

During the course of his life he has himself killed, or been in at the death of, five hundred bears, of which at least two-thirds have fallen by his own hands. In the years just before the war he had on one occasion, in Mississippi, killed sixty-eight bears in five months. Once he killed four bears in a day; at another time ,three, and frequently two.

The two largest bears he himself killed weighed respectively four hun-dred and eight and four hundred and ten pounds. Most of his hunting for bears was done in northern Mississippi, where he had a plantation.

VITIATED AIR.

Impurity of the Atmosphere of Steam Heated Buildings.

In an article contributed to the Philadelphia Record by Dr. F. A. Adams, the inquiry is propounded whether the immense increase of steam-heated office buildings, in which the great majority of rooms have no adequate means for the renewal of the air to be warmed, may not in a large measure account for the prevalence of pneumonia among middle-aged men. Many of these buildings, Dr. Adams says, are admirably constructed to keep out air, whether cold or not; this very perfection contributing to their insalubrity. In these hermetically sealed office rooms that abound in business buildings the steam heats the atmosphere to a delightfully comfortable degree, and the occupant breathes and rebreathes the air during zero days when an open window cannot be endured, the effect being to silently undermine his powers of resistance, so that when he goes forth, exchanging such tropical air for the keen breeze of unrestricted nature, it happens that, through some subtle change in his system which has robbed his lungs of their power of resistance, their capacity to endure the onset or transition is gone and the subtle poison of cating other land.

There is room for a great reformation in the matter of salaries of state officers. If the stated salaries are not enough, they should be raised, and the fee system abolished. The present salary of the governor, $1,500, is such as to preclude a poor man from occupying that position, and while the other $1,500 or $2,000 earned in various ways by the overnor is nothing to be begrudged, the principle is wrong in occupying the mind of the chief executive of the state with such matters. The secretary of state also helps out his salary by a commission of 1% of 1 per cent on the invested capital of all insurance companies within the state. Such petty business should not be applicable to these leading state officers, if indeed officials in any capacity.

Mr. Robinson of Pennsylvania, speaking before the house, quoted as follows from the New York Sun : "What is the Wilson bill? Is it a bill for the constitational democratic tariff for revenue only? Not much. Is it for a tariff for deficiency only? Not precisely. It will raise some revenue. Is it for a protective tariff? Well, a sort of protective tariff, but a poor and cranky sort. Mc-Kinley's is much better, much more rational, systematic, and just to all interests. Taking revenue and anti-revenue together, the Wilson bill is a fantastic and personal bill. It is a jumble of unconstitutionalities and favoritisms. compounded to gratify the more powerful applicants for license to rob, and to vindicate the hobbies of Grover Cleveland put on record previous to the Chicago platform. A well was to be cleaned, but the man who had undertaken the job was afraid to go down until he had tested the quality of the air at the bottom. He let down a lighted candle and when it was about siz feet from the bottom it went out as suddenly as if a whiff of wind had struck it.

That told the man all he needed to know. The well was full of poisonous gas. He took a small umbrella, tied a string to the handle and lowered it open into the well. Then he drew it up, carried it a few feet from the well and upset it. This operation he re-peated twenty or thirty times, with the bystanders, who are never absent on such occasions, all laughing at him. After this he let down another candle. It burned clearly even at the bottom. Before going down to his work he explained to those who had been making fun of him that the gas in the well was carbonic acid gas, which is heavier than air, and therefore could be drawn up in an umbrella as if it had been so much water.
