SCHEME DIDN'T WORK

An Attempt to Rob the Government Foiled by Accident.

FORGER CAUGHT IN WASHINGTON

An Old Man Deeded His Land to the Government and then Repented of His Act.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—James Elder, an eccentric old man of Whatcom, Wash., prior to March, 1891, made a gift by deed to the United States government of five great tracts of land, the present value of which is now estimated at $900,000. Elder had three relatives for whom he cared nothing. He deeded the land to the government with the request that it be given to deserving immigrants from the overcrowded East. No sooner had Elder deeded the lands than the three distant relatives called on him. They would take measures to have him declared insane unless he would recover the property. Elder made a request for his deeds, but did not receive them. Then his relatives concocted a scheme to steal the papers from the land office in Washington and substitute forged documents in their stead. When this was done Elder could put in a plea that the deeds by which his land was conveyed to the government were forgeries. William Jameson, of Port Townsend, Wash., was the man assigned to make the substitution of the forged for the real deeds. Jameson came to Washington with strong letters of introduction, and was given the run of the land office. As he was leaving at night he said to Clerk Weld: "By the way, was any one here inquiring about old man Elder's case? I heard a good deal of it out West." The clerk replied "No," and went to the shelf to take down the tin box containing the records. As soon as Jameson saw where the tin box was kept, he pleasantly said: "Oh, don't pull them down; its late and I'm too tired to look at them tonight. In fact, I don't think they will help me in my case." Next day Jameson visited the land office and it is said abstracted the five Elder deeds from the box. He went immediately to New York to a lithographing shop and had the five original deeds copied, even to the indorsements. With the plates he went to a printer and caused deeds exactly like the originals to be made. By a queer coincidence Clerk Weld in the land office had an occasion the very next day to look into the tin box which had held the original deeds. The deeds were gone. Jameson was afterward arrested by secret service men. His trial will take place in the United States district court in a few days. Jameson was admitted to bail in $7,500 and allowed to return to Port Townsend. The object of this was to enable the secret service department to get evidence against the conspirators. In this however they failed except in the case of Elder, who, Chief Drummond says, will turn state's evidence. Elder was arrested in Washington a fortnight ago and taken to Washington with Jameson. They are now out on bail.

HOW TO TREAT HOPS.

Hints Upon Their Cultivation by Mr. R. F. Wickham.

FAIRVIEW, Feb. 28, 1894.

Editor CHRONICLE:

DEAR SIR—Seeing an article in a recent issue of your paper purporting to be a practical course to pursue in the planting and cultivating of a hop yard, and as I have had some experience in the growing of hops in the state of New York, where they are extensively and successfully grown, would say, in the first place select a soil that would be suitable for growing a fair crop of timothy, though it is not altogether necessary that it should be quite so wet, as the hop is a plant that requires a great deal of cultivation, thereby creating a great deal of moisture. A northwest slope is the best, and the next choice is a flat or level. Having such soil and location, you need not hesitate in planting hops and having a good crop, if properly attended to. If new land is to be used, it would be better to have it plowed in the fall or early in the spring, so as to give the soil a chance to pulverize and evaporate some of the wild nature. It should be plowed thoroughly and deep, well harrowed and then rooted. Mr. Carpenter says plant your hops seven feet each way. I would say eight feet each way, for hops require a good share of sunlight and fresh air. As a marker for getting your yard square and rows straight, Mr. Carpenter advises the use of a wire or string. I have a better device. It is a square frame made from four pieces of 1x2, with a one-inch hole in each corner, firmly screwed together, with two pieces of the same material screwed on top, about sixteen inches apart, so as to permit a man to walk between. It takes two men to operate this, the same as the wire or string, but it has many advantages over the former. Just start your yard from a straight side; make four pieces to fit in the holes of your frame closely, so that you can raise your frame and your pins will remain; have the pins twelve inches long and a pin for each hill; the other man to carry the frame and the other to insert the pins, taking two rows at once. You want to count on twelve hundred roots to the acre. It is always best to put two roots in a hill. In planting withdraw the pins and plant the roots in the hole. The roots should not be less than five inches long and cut from the runners of good thrifty hills. Secure one male for every sixty, which will place them after the first row in every sixth row and every tenth hill. The male hills need a permanent stake, so that you can at all times tell where he is. Your first hill in first row ought to be a male, and so on on your return on the sixth row.

Mr. Carpenter thinks it is not worth while to pole the first year. I would say pole your hops by all means, so that you can thoroughly cultivate them, and you will have a fine crop the first year; then if the market is fair your labor is not in vain. You can cultivate them once a week from the time they are one foot high until they are in bloom, which will be from the 1st to the 20th of July. When the vines are about thirty inches high if they are not inclined to climb the pole they should be tied to the poles loosely so as not to bruise the vines, and continue the tying about three times in fourteen feet. Poles to be used should not be less than fourteen feet and from three to four inches at the but-end, and should be set as soon as the young vines make their appearance, and if one pole only is used it should be set as near plumb as possible; but if two poles are used, they ought to be spread a trifle at the top. In setting all poles be sure and set them six or eight inches from the hill, in line with the rows.

There is no question as regards the growing of hops in a large portion of Wasco county, and especially on the high bench land and foot hills. I have on my place about one and a half acres which have been planted six years, but have not attended to them more than to cultivate until last year, when I poled them, and I have never seen a finer lot of hops. They would easily have averaged one and a half tons per acre; and at ten cents per pound $300 per acre. Of course you must not count this net cash; but the expense is not so alarming as some make it appear. In my next I will give a minute detail of all the expenses attached to the growing of hops, from the planting to the baling. My intention is to have a nice little yard this coming spring, which will contain five acres. This is an industry which I take a deep interest in, and have endeavored for years to persuade some of our farmers to take hold of it. Am more than pleased to know that several have begun preparations for planting this spring. The signs of the times plainly indicate that farmers must go into diversifying their crops and also their stock if they wish to keep their heads above water in these hard times.
