Notwithstanding the continued wet weather the excavating at the Locks is going ahead in pretty good shape. The amount of work already accomplished begins to show up in great shape.

Mr. J. S. Schenck presented us with a sprig of lemons that were raised on Mr. Murphy's ranch at Marysville, Cal., that are as fine specimens as we ever saw; in fact, Southern California is not in it, in beauty, size and elegance. The Marysville district is peculiarly adapted to citrus fruits, and her products command the top margins of the markets.

It is just thirty-one days till fishing season opens, and fishermen are anticipating a big catch. There are reasons for such an opinion. Four years ago the run was very large and the spawn of that year will have just matured this year. Experience shows that the fourth year after every large run it is repeated. The numerous rises in the river have also been favorable, and very high water this year is an accomplished fact, all of which argues well for a prosperous fishing season.

OREGON PLUNDERED.

The John Day Fossil Beds Enrich All Museums but Ours.

They Are to Be Despoiled Again This Summer--A Note of Warning--The Richest Fossil Beds on Earth.

William Ireland, jr., state geologist of California, will come to Oregon next month for the purpose of studying the geology of this section and will spend four months among the fossil beds, studying, besides the different formations of the past stages of the earth, the evidences of animal life belonging to these periods. The excuse California has for researches in Oregon is that our state is allied geologically to California. Geology does not recognize state lines. Oregon discharged her geologist, Prof. Thos. Condon, several years ago, merely because the position cost $500 per year, and now Oregon, the richest state in the Union for the paleontologist, is being neglected by herself and plundered by others.

The John Day fossil beds are something entirely new, and contain fossils not known to exist in any other part of the world. Yale college has over 100 different specimens of ancient animals which have never before been duplicated, and possibly never will be again, even from the same fields. For seven years prior to 1882 Yale sent out expeditions, and employed Mr. L. S. Davis of this city as guide. Her museum has been filled with John Day fossils, containing not only new species of formerly discovered families, but the fossilized remains of entirely new genera. In 1882 the geological survey replenished the national museum with specimens wonderful and rare from the John Day fossil beds. In like manner the Princeton expedition of 1889 robbed the beds of whatever had been exposed by the rains of preceding years. The Academy of Science of Philadelphia, also, plundered Oregon an entire summer since that time and the year before another party from the same place secured rich treasures of an age which can never be reproduced.

It is time Oregon took some precautions calculated to save for herself these valuable relics of ages extinct from memory and otherwise from knowledge. Prof. Condon, alone, has a few of these fossils, but a lamentable paucity compared to the inestimable treasures of Yale. Now, after an absence of vandals from other states of several years, California proposes to send her state geologist to make another clean-up. Of course there will be valuable fossils exposed, for it has been several years since these fields were picked over, and the rains, particularly of the late winter, which have been excessive, will have uncovered rich treasures.

If Oregon was alive to her own interests she would stop this wholesale despoiling of her fossil beds, and employ a geologist to gather these fossils for herself. If she will not, a few citizens of The Dalles, by acting promptly and sending out at once a man who knows these fields as well as Mr. Davis, could secure the cream of the exposures before Mr. Ireland's arrival, and establish a museum in this city which would be sought for thousands of miles, and second to none in the world.
