TEXT OF THE TREATY

Future Relations Between the United States and China.

WORK OF GRESHAM AND YANG YU

As Plenipotentiaries of the Governments Interested, They Agree Upon the Terms of the Convention.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—The following is a copy of the salient points of the Chinese treaty which has been negotiated with China. It was sent to the senate March 9 with a simple note of transmission, saying it had been concluded at Washington the 17th inst.

Whereas, the two governments are desirous of adopting reciprocal measures for the better protection of the citizens or subjects of each within the jurisdiction of the other;

Now, therefore, the president of the United States appointed Walter Q. Gresham, secretary of the state, as his plenipotentiary, and his imperial majesty the emperor of China has appointed Yang Yu, an officer of second rank, sub-director of the court of sacrificial worship, and envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, and the said plenipotentiaries having exhibited their respective full powers, found to be in due and good form, have agreed upon the following articles:

By article 1 China agrees to prohibit the immigration of laborers to the United States.

Article 2 relates to the return of registered laborers who may have gone back to China, leaving in this country property of the value of $1,000 or more. It applies also to the lawful wives and children of such registered Chinese.

Article 3 specifies the rights of Chinese officials, teachers, students, etc., coming to and residing in the United States.

Article 4 guarantees on the part of the United States the safety of persons and property of Chinese residing in this country.

By article 5 the United States recognizes the right of the Chinese government to enforce the case of American laborers residing in China, regulations similar to those applicable to Chinese residing in the United States. The treaty was signed in duplicate March 17, by Secretary Gresham, and Yang Yu, Chinese minister at Washington.

Behind Closed Doors.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—Arguments were heard by Judge Bradley today, behind closed doors, on the admission or exclusion of certain objectionable passages in the depositions of witnesses for the defense. The reason for the secrecy was to prevent the objectionable testimony from being made public through the newspapers, thus bringing it in a measure before the jury, who are to be kept in ignorance of the evidence until the judge decides that it is admissible. The most interesting points argued were in reference to admitting the depositions of Alex. Julian, W. W. Roselle and Dr. Lewis. Julian is referred to by Miss Pollard as "My blind sweetheart, my modern Barnabas," who despoised that one Christmas day, while at the house of Squire Kinsley, Miss Pollard, after drinking too much egg nog, went through a form of mock marriage with Julian and proposed they carry out the marital relation. The testimony of Dr. Lewis was that Colonel Swope, who was killed in a street duel in Lexington, had requested him to perform an operation on Miss Pollard, with whom he said he had become involved. Lewis did not know whether the Miss Pollard mentioned was Madeline or some other Miss Pollard. W. W. Roselle is the man who deposed that he had taken liberties with Miss Pollard while she was a student at Wesleyan college. The arguments continued five hours, and Judge Bradley then took the questions submitted under consideration, to decide them Monday morning, when the court meets again. Miss Pollard's counsel surprised the defense by making a sweeping objection to all their depositions, on the ground that they had been taken in an irregular manner.

A Protest From Women.

New York, March 24.—The fourth annual business meeting and election of officers of the National Christian League for the Promotion of Social Purity was held this afternoon at the headquarters of the league. The meeting was well attended. It was a long one, for there was much important business to be transacted. One cause of the long continuance of the meeting was an animated discussion concerning Representative Breckinridge, in which the ladies became involved. They finally decided to send a memorial to congress protesting against allowing Colonel Breckinridge to retain his seat. They also decided to send a communication to Mrs. Breckinridge, formerly Mrs. Wing, calling upon her in the name of womanhood to renounce her husband, and to refuse to live with him longer. In addition to this, they call upon the presbytery with which Colonel Breckinridge is connected, asking to have the representative expelled.

NEWS NOTES.

Raging blizzards are reported throughout the middle west.

The Coxy army of rag-tag and bob-tails are increasing in number, despite all predictions to the contrary. The army at Massillon, Or., is encamped under a big circus tent and provisions are pouring in by the carload. Populists all along the proposed line of march are preparing to furnish them with commissaries. Bert Hamilton of Denver is organizing an army of 5,000 to join them. Gen. Fry's "Industrial" army at San Antonio, Tex., numbers 1,000. Kansas is also preparing a contingent. A portion of the Tenth U. S. regiment at Pittsburg is being prepared to meet them at the Ohio line if the army have any difficulty with that state.

THEY CHEAT SCOUNDRELS.

street Fakirs Who Sell Harmless Books Under False Pretenses.

Even the itinerant vendors of small wares on the streets, who usually dispose of their little novelties and what-nots so readily, have had to resort to practices quite objectionable this season, remarks Country Gentleman. For instance, here is a man who has an armful of paper-covered books to sell. The book is a very light piece of fiction, a tale of love, written by some embryonic and ambitious scribbler. It has no literary pretensions, and is meritorious in no way, except that it is innocent of all grossness and obscenity. A child might read it without risk of irritating its moral epidermis. Such a book would not tempt one man in a thousand, even at the nominal charge of five cents a copy. Indeed, the same books are being offered from a peddler's cart, two blocks above, at that price, with scant success. The vendor in question has been long at his trade. Intrigue is necessary. Throwing his heavy coat about the books, thus covering them from view with the exception of their red backs, he moves cautiously and slowly across the street and back again. No policeman (it is apparently a policeman that he is trying to evade) being in sight, he exclaims in a fitting tone for the occasion: "Fifteen cents, gents; help yourselves. Suppressed edition of the latest craze. Don't stop, gents; move right along." Humanity pricks up its ears. Here is questionable literature for sale. The imagination appeals to the grosser instincts, and a youth slips fifteen cents into the extended hand and pulls a book from the pack. "Help yourselves and move right along. Don't collect a crowd. Use care, now, and pass along," excitedly continues the impostor. A gray-haired man drops a copy into his overcoat pocket without looking at the title. The example becomes contagious, victims increase, and soon the stock in trade is disposed of.

When a slip from one of the rose trees near Omar Khayyam's grave, grafted on an English stock, was planted at the head of the grave of Edward Fitzgerald, whose translation of the "Rubaiyat" has become such a household book, Omar's prophecy was doubly verified. That prophecy was: "My tomb shall be a spot where the north wind may scatter roses over it."

MITCHELL.

The weather is very blustery and chilly.

A band of beef steers passed through here today enroute to the Portland markets.

Snow between Canyon and Bear Valley, Grant Co., is from two to five feet deep and the Lockwood grade is running overfull. There can be no travel on that route except on snow shoes.

Rev. Mr. Gregory and son have been holding meetings here for the last week without success. The ministers get but little encouragement to come here to spend their time and breath. They find the people sin-cased.

Friday morning S. F. Allen started to The Dalles with a load of passengers. Mr. and Mrs. Estes were on their way to Montana, Mrs. Dr. Houck on her way to see her mother in Portland, and Miss Stella Boardman to see friends in Portland and The Dalles, if they are not detained in the mud in Cold Camp or a worse place.

Friday night a select dance was given at Alec Trent's on Shoe Fly which was a success, an unusual occurrence for this place. But the secret of the success was that Mr. Trent rifled packets of weapons and locked them up until they were called for as the owner was ready to take his exit for home. We would like to give Mr. Trent three cheers for that act of justice. Where there was justice dealt out so deservedly, there was also a little romance. It was as unique as amusing and gives the impression that Mitchell and Shoo Fly people are not devoid of generosity and sense of the entire fitness of the situation. Two young men (to mention their name, please let me forbear) went and most assuredly each had with him his best girl. But was it? We will see. The dance went on merrily some hours when one of the fellows had lost his best girl, and one of the best girls had lost her best beau, and what more could be done than to sympathize one with the other; when a reasonable length of time had passed the lost put in an appearance. Jokes were passed between the pairs and each seemed pleased with the exchange, and when the clarion notes from the barn yard trumpet sounded the blast for the break of day as well as the break of the dance, there had been a friendly agreement that each fellow had made a mistake and did not take his best girl to the dance, but with an even trade they took them home.

A report is to the effect that Jack Hamlet was surrounded. He was seen at a distance of a hundred and fifty yards by the sheriff and a deputy. The sheriff called a halt and raised his gun to fire when the deputy cried "Don't shoot, that is Mr. Gilliam," and before they were satisfied of Hamlet's identity he had safely gained a thicket, but almost immediately he was surrounded by a posse of men who had, at last reports, kept him there all night and a part of a day without blankets, food or fire, which must be very unfavorable to his comfort, as the place is situated at the foot of a big mountain and there is plenty of snow in the vicinity for a mile or two around. With that there is no possible chance for him to escape, since he could be tracked without difficulty. Near the thicket is an old deserted cabin where he had some provisions and blankets he had stolen from sheep camps and cellars which he had frequented of late and always went free handed. Hamlet's hiding place was Horse-shoe, two or three miles from Mr. Chapman's and the thicket is an excellent place for one in hiding, as it is almost impenetrable, but the chances are they will get him within a few days.

LATER—News of Hamlet, just received, is that he has made good his escape and at present his whereabouts are unknown, but think he is in the John Day rimbucks, since they traced him in that direction several miles.

EIGHT-MILE.

The citizens of this vicinity held a very enthusiastic meeting at the 8-Mile school house Monday evening. Mr. Kerns of Portland was the principal speaker, and gave a very excellent address on finance, showing beyond a shadow of a doubt that the scarcity of money was the main cause of the present depression in business and the low price of farm produce. At the close of the speaking a people's party club was formed and a general invitation given for all present who wished to become members, when, with two or three exceptions, all signed.
