STATE OF REBELLION

Situation in South Carolina Is Considered Very Grave.

NO BLOOD WAS SHED SATURDAY

Militia Failing Him, Governor Tillman Is Endeavoring to Mobilize 12,000 Men at Darlington.

COLUMBIA, S. C., March 31.—South Carolina is in a state of rebellion. A fight occurred Friday at Darlington between spies sent by the government to report violations of the liquor law, and a mob of citizens of that place. One spy was killed and the others fled. Several persons were wounded in the conflict. Today passed without any further bloodshed, but the situation is considered by the cooler heads as being very grave. Governor Tillman is very much worried, and has telegraphed orders to nearly every military company in the state to proceed here at once, the intention being to mass all troops possible to go to Darlington. Already several companies have arrived, but if the governor's relying upon action of these companies as a safeguard, he is depending on a forlorn hope. The company from Newbury has already disbanded, and troops from the governor's own county say they have merely come in obedience to military orders to be on the scene, and that they will refuse to go to Darlington. All day the governor has been telegraphing orders to military organizations in various parts of the state to go to Darlington, but he was met with many absolute refusals on the part of troops and other companies. Last night the troops of Columbia refused to obey the governor's orders and disbanded. Today the Gordon light infantry declined to go and sent the governor a dispatch, saying:

"We are in sympathy with the citizens of Darlington in their purpose of the defense of their homes."

The Sumter infantry has refused to obey the orders. The Bishopville company, of Sumter county, went to Darlington today, but at once returned home, and would not perform the work expected of them. The Fourth brigade, of Charleston, the largest and best-equipped troop in the state, has been ordered to the front and will not go.

FAITHFUL TO THE GOVERNOR. Several companies, however, have been more faithful to the governor, and are now en route to that place. A company from Orangeburg, one from Clarendon county and perhaps several other companies will reach the seat of war tonight or tomorrow. At Orangeburg today, J. M. Stokes, who was defeated for congress at the regular election, made a harangue, and organized a company of 100 men, who have a farmer as a captain, to go to the support of Tillman. It is the governor's purpose to mobilize 12,000 men at Darlington, but he finds the task difficult in the extreme. He will exhaust all his power to suppress the trouble. In the meantime the citizens of Darlington, Florence and vicinity are idle, and all go armed, prepared for trouble. Local dispensaries at perhaps a dozen points have been raided and their contents run out. Scouting parties have been after the constables who escaped yesterday, and while some of them are safe, others are liable to be taken, and in the mood of the people around Darlington may meet with a speedy death if their capture is effected by the enraged people. The affair has intensified the bitter feeling in this state, and not in years has there been such estrangement between the different factions and elements of South Carolina.

WILLIAM LEADS A BAND.

The Kaiser Did Not Like the Way the March Was Going.

A Berlin letter says: There is, of course, nothing that Emperor William cannot do. He knows everything, and can give the most learned a good start and an easy beating in all branches of art, literature, music, soldiering, or, in fact, any other matter that mortal man knows anything about. The military band of the Foot guards, which is about one of the best in Europe, was playing a march in the court-yard of the Schloss a few days ago, but the time did not suit William. He thought he knew more about it than the conductor, so he straightway emerged from the palace, stopped the music and, taking the baton from the bandmaster's hand, conducted the piece himself to his beating. The musicians were in a state of terror, but he warned them up to a gallop time, and when he had finished returned the baton to the conductor with the remark: "Next time you play that march play it properly. I have given you the correct time. Now dismiss the band, go to the barracks and play nothing else for a week." This order was religiously carried into effect, and for a whole week the guards knew no other melody but that eccentric march, which no man could keep step to.

Another matter which has upset William's equilibrium is the fact that the people stare at him in church. He doesn't like it, and has now ordered that whenever he attends divine service all seats of which he can see the occupants, or from which he can be seen, shall be filled by soldiers, so that he may not be disturbed in his prayers. The soldiers are compelled to look straight before them, and any deviation of the head from the "eyes front" is punished by confinement to barracks and heavy pack drill.

Although he does not imitate his great-grandfather in criticizing a sermon in the pulpit during the progress of its delivery, William nevertheless follows in his footsteps with regard to limiting its length, and shortly after his accession issued strict commands to the effect that none of the court chaplains should preach more than ten-minute sermons. The Kaiser says by enforcing this rule he has contributed in no small degree to the extraordinary revival of religious sentiment throughout Prussia that has signaled his occupancy of the throne. Certain it is, he asserts, that a ten-minute sermon is far more effective and beneficial than one of twenty, thirty, forty or even sixty minutes. It forces the preachers to be concise and to concentrate all that is best and strongest of his argument in that brief span instead of scattering it over a longer period of time—a process that naturally diminishes its vigor and its force.

GROWN BY THE ANCIENTS.

Asparagus is a Vegetable with Something of a Pedigree.

Of all the plants used for food, there is none which has been so long known, or has had, so to say, so distinguished a lineage as asparagus, says Chambers' Journal. Its record, in fact, reaches back to almost the commencement of authentic history, as it is mentioned by the comic poet Cratinus, who died about 425 B. C., and was a contemporary of, though slightly older than, Aristophanes.

Among the Romans, also, the tasty vegetable was held in high esteem. "to the elder—not the gentleman who was of opinion that Plato reasoned well, but his great-grandfather, who assisted upon the destruction of Carthage, and who was born 234 B. C.—wrote a work which is still extant, 'De Re Rustica,' and in it he treats at length of the virtues and proper cultivation of asparagus. Pliny, also, in his 'Natural History,' (about 60 A. D.), has much to say on the subject. "Of all the productions of your garden," he feelingly observes, "your chief care will be your asparagus," and he devotes several chapters and parts of chapters to its many beneficial qualities and the best modes of raising it.

He asserts that, even in his day, the soil about Ravenna was so favorable to its production that three heads grown in that district had been known to weigh a Roman pound. As, however, this pound seems to have been equal to only about eleven of our ounces, it would apparently have required four of the stocks to reach a pound of our weight; but this result, considering the state of horticulture in those days, may be looked upon as wonderful enough, and has, in point of fact, only been equaled in our own times.

MOUNT HOOD.

The snow is all gone, but it will be a good many days before plows are running in this neighborhood—water, water everywhere.

Roads are bad. In some places in the wagon tracks water runs 40 miles an hour. All the cross-cuts are filled with mud and the bridges are almost ready to sail to Cape Horn. Trees are sticking out on the road like a ship's jibboom. Now is the time to work the roads. War on the mud boys. But where is our supervisor? Where? Some say he is waiting for the month of May, when everybody is busy at the plow.

THE MARGAY CAT.

An Interesting Member of the Feline Race and its Peculiarities.

The Margay, or American tiger cat, is a little smaller than the ocelot and not quite so handsome. The legs and feet are spotted in true leopard fashion, but the shoulders, sides and back are plentifully besprinkled with small, irregular rosettes or else big black blotches, which on the shoulders are lengthened into semi-circular bands. The ground color is bright tawny above and lighter below. A specimen in the American museum of natural history measures twenty-four inches in length of head and body; tail, ten inches, and height at the shoulder, ten and one-half inches. Of all the American Felidae, writes W. T. Hornaday in St. Nicholas, the Margay cat approaches nearest to the domestic cat in temper and habits. In South America, where it is commonest, it is often tamed and allowed the freedom of a house because of the rats it exterminates. It is said to make, when caught young and well treated, a very docile animal. In its wild state, however, it is death on poultry and young pigs, and wherever a house stands at the edge of its jungle home it makes itself a great nuisance. I once shot a bold and audacious specimen on the Essequibo river in South America about midday as it was in the very act of carrying off a duckling from a spot within thirty yards of the house. The home of the Margay cat is in the heavy, low-lying forests of tropical America, from the state of Vera Cruz, in Mexico, southward through the whole of Central and South America to Paraguay. Even hunters seldom see it save along the margins of water-courses, a very favorite resort for forest dwellers generally.

A Striking Outfit.

Sir Thomas Robinson, a wealthy Englishman of the last century, was a tall, uncouth man, and his appearance was rendered still more striking by his hunting dress, which consisted of a tight green jacket, buckskin breeches and a fur cap. He once set off in his hunting suit to pay a visit to his sister in Paris, and he arrived at the house while there was a large company at dinner. The servant announced "Monsieur Robinson," and in walked this remarkable figure, to the amazement of the guests. One of them, a French abbe, lifted his fork three times to his mouth and each time laid it down without tasting the food. Unable at last to restrain his curiosity he burst out eagerly: "Excuse me, monsieur, are you the famous Robinson Crusoe, so remarkable in history?"
