DEAD MEN'S FOUD IN TUCATAN.

There Are Occasions When It Is Very Much Relished by the Living. From remote times the Mayas have been accustomed to make offerings to the souls of the departed, particularly a certain pie that they call "food for the soul," says Mrs. Le Pilongem in Popular Science Monthly. The crust must be of yellow corn; the interior, tender chicken and small pieces of pork. These pies are wrapped in leaves of the banana tree and baked underground between hot stones. When done they are placed on the graves or hung from trees close by. Sometimes, after leaving them there for an hour when you buy shoes or clothing? or two, the living take home the pies ethereal part of the substance

When among the ruins in the ancient city of Chichen Itza, we happened to be very hard pressed for food on All Saints' day, as on many other occasions, and knowing that the "feast of the dead" would be celebrated in a not very distant village, we allowed some of our men to go there and take their chance of enjoying a good meal. In that they were most successful, the natives being at all times exceedingly hospitable, and never failing to invite those who approach their home to partake of what they have. But the men also thought of us. We had early taken to our hammocks, remembering the saying: "Qui dort, dine" (He who sleeps, eats). About two o'clock in the morning we were aroused by a The worst cases of Chronic lage. He had waited there till all were asleep, then made his way to the graveyard and gathered from a tree a fine fruit in the shape of a large pie. This he brought to us, The dead man's food was still wrapped in its banana leaf, and we were not sorry to avail ourselves of this chance to breakfast at two o'clock in the morning. No tender chicken was concealed within that particular crust, only a pig's foot with a few stray bristles on it, and a most liberal dose of red pepper, but hunger made it ex-

A young farmer who had been converted at one of the revivals went before the next conference and asked for a license to be a preacher. "I know I am born to preach the word," said the applicant, "for I have had three visions, all the same, and it has made a lasting impression on me." "What was your vision?" asked a bishop. "Wal, I saw a big, round, blue ring in the sky, and inside in great gold letters, were 'P. C.' It meant 'Preach Christ,' and I want to join the conference." The

MOLASSES AND PETROLEUM. They Are Carried as Alternate Cargoes In

About all the molasses which comes from Cuba to the United States is brought in the same tanks in stemmships that are used to carry petroleum as a return cargo, says the New York Tribune. The ships' tanks are about sixteen feet deep and have a neck seven feet deep. They are pumped full of oil at Brockdyn or Philadelphia, then taken to Havana, and the oil is pumped out into the tanks of the refining plants there. Molasses is brought from the interior of the island in huge hogsheads, which are emptied into the storage tanks. A suction pump drawing about ten thousand gallons an hour fills each ship's tanks to within about two feet of the top, that amount of space being required for the expansion of the molasses. It might be supposed that the petroleum would have a bad effect on the molasses, but it has been shown that the contrary is the case, and as nearly one-half the importation is made into rum and the balance re-fined into sugar a little oil is not of much account. The tanks are cleaned after the molasses has been pumped out by turning in a powerful steam jet, which washes down the sides and liquefies whatever molasses may be left in the bottom of the tank, and the suction pump finishes the work.

A cargo of molasses, which formerly required ten or twelve days, can now be unloaded in forty-eight hours, while the difference in the cost of handling, to say nothing of the saving of time, amounts to a large sum.

The first attempt at handling molasses in bulk was made by the brig Novelty in 1877. She was fitted with a lining and her whole hold was used without partitions. She made several trips between Matanzas and Boston, but was not successful as a dividend earner. Since the present system of dividing a vessel's hold into tanks was devised and put in practice on steamers the profits of the trade and the steamship companies have largely in-
