OBITUARY.

IN MEMORY OF LUCY STARRS. She left us all so swiftly. For that best, tho' unknown land, 'Tis there she'll wait our coming. On the distant, golden strand. She has wandered into that city Of beautiful calm and peace. A peaceful, soothing region, Where roses of heart all cease. 'Tis well, but oh, what anguish To bow in holy trust. When silent forms, once full of life, Are laid beneath the dust. When one so young and hopeful Is coldly borne away, We feel more keen the sorrow That tears cannot allay. Flowers ne'er were fadeless. The fairest pass away. Visions to us most precious, Soonest leave the light of day. 'Tis sweet to know she's resting. Where happy of angels ring. Beyond the orient weavers, Where the best forever sing. We're glad to know that never Will sorrow enter there. No more can pain o'er reach her In that country, oh, so fair! Farewell, oh loving sister; Farewell, dear, faithful friend. Fondest hearts are breaking, And no one balm can lend. We mourn your sad departure. Your presence we so miss. But to earth you've bade adieu for aye, And reached a land of bliss. Gone, gone, our darling Lucy, Your voice forever's stilled. From this sad day we'll ever know, What a place you've always filled.

A FRIEND.
