TODAY'S MENACE.

The members of the city council are in a quandary as to what to do with the Coxey army when it arrives. This army contains 700 men, and they realize that the city is practically powerless to command them to leave or to demand anything whatever of them. The seriousness of the situation in a national sense is made apparent by the object lesson which The Dalles is to receive, and which nearly every city and town in the country will receive. The trouble is aggravated by the sympathy given them by labor unions, and the ovations they receive en route to the capital. This strengthens them in their purpose and they are led to believe they are enlisted in a righteous cause. But while, so far, the various contingents of this great army have claimed to be law-abiding and peaceable, there is every element of anarchy in it, and they need only to be mobilized and harangued by fiery speakers to enter upon a career of carnage and rapine which might tear the nation asunder. Chaos would reign and a government of the people and by the people would have to be again entered in history as a failure. Considering these facts it becomes a matter of extreme gravity as to the reception they are given en route, and a matter of great responsibility on the part of every citizen. Every intelligent and worthy man should weigh the matter carefully in his own mind before lending his moral or financial support to a horde of men who have the power to inaugurate a bloody civil war in our midst. He should analyze its component parts, and ascertain its desires and intentions. There are probably some worthy men among them, but it is certain the majority are vagabonds and would not work if work was offered them. The army claim to be peaceable, but already we have seen that they have seized a train at St. Paul, also at Butte, Mont., when refused transportation. We have seen that when work was offered in individual cases they did not accept it. The sincerity of their motives may thus well be queetioned. The intention of the army is stated to be to march to Washington and demand labor. This is a question for congress to decide. Their action will be guided by the consensus of opinion of the nation. If the army is feted and hurrahed en route by all the people, their demands must be taken as just, and to be complied with. It is yet, perhaps, too early to decide definitely as to the movement.

Developments must be awaited, but at the first intimation of lawlessness or violence it is the duty of every patriotic citizen to raise against them and that quickly and effectually.

Since the above was penned comes the news of the affray at Billings, Mont. Our fears are hence confirmed that there is danger in the formation of these large bodies of undisciplined men. The news comes like the firing of the first shot at Fort Sumpter. Is it the prelude to a general and bloody strife, or will the native good sense of the American people now rise to the emergency, and put down this vagrant army?

FEARED HIS WIFE THE MOST. The Juror Knew His Spouse and Therefore Disobeyed the Court.

On one occasion Judge Andrew Ellison was trying an important case at Macon City, and it was desired to rush it through in order to make way for another case coming up next morning, says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. The court instructed the jury and court officials to return after supper that night, as it was intended to hold a night session. At seven o'clock all the officers, numerous witnesses and the jury, with one exception, were promptly on hand. Of course, nothing could be done without the absent juryman. The minutes ran into hours and still the prodigal didn't return. At a late hour court adjourned without having accomplished anything. Next morning sharp at nine o'clock the twelve jurymen were in the box: His honor scanned the crowd and asked for the truant. He was pointed out and the court ordered him to stand up.

"Mr. -," said the judge, addressing the derelict, "didn't you understand the order of the court last night requiring the jury to be on hand after supper?" 'Yes, your honor," said the juryman, explaining, "but you see I live quite a ways out of town and my wife gave me an order prior to the court's order and her order was that I 'shouldn't stay in town over night. I considered the matter and concluded it was safer to risk your honor's displeasure than her'n, because," he added, earnestly, 'I know her!"

The court looked solemn a moment. as if weighing some mighty problem, then a smile started across his face, and the bar, court officers and spectators broke out in tumultuous laughter. The juryman was forgiven; there were many there who could, perhaps, appreciate his position.

A GREAT ENGLISH JURIST.

Some Queer Traits of the Late Sir James

It was said of the late Sir James Fitzjames Stephen, of the high court of justice, who retired from the bench in 1891, that he was the greatest authority on criminal law that the bar has produced.

The stories told of his severe utterances and of his gentle and merciful deeds would fill a volume, says the New York Sun. Although his manner was rough and his sentences invariably pronounced in a harsh voice, genuine distress always appealed to his kind heart and won his sympathy. His lordship never had the slightest hesitation in rebuking a barrister, of no matter how high standard, who failed, even for an instant, to respect the dignity of the court, or who took unfair advantage of a witness. And Sir rebulies were often more James' dreaded than the adverse verdict of a jury. On the other hand, he would go far out of his way to assist a struggling young barrister who lacked only experience. It was said of him that he was a lawyer among literary men and a literary man among lawyers. His speeches and his legal decisions ran in a style that reminded one of Macaulay, whom he. had evidently taken for his literary model. His literary sketches bear the stamp of a sound mind and good judgment. His first production was a series entitled: "Essays by a Barrister," which appeared in the Saturday Review and secured for him a foothold in the literary world. While on the bench many of his decisions and utterance were severely criticised.

"I should not believe a man on his oath," he once said, "who told me he did not care for getting on." That remark was criticised in nearly every publication in England, much to his lordship's disgust. The small things of life did not interest him very much. and he frequently amused a roomful the meaning of something which an ordinary child might know of barristers and spectators by asking Cleanliness of the English.

"An American writer," says Tid-Bits, praises the English as the cleanest H. people on earth, and declares that the reason for our extra cleanliness is because the fogs and smoke of our island would make us the dirtiest people in the world but for our instinctive cleanliness. The concluding paragraph of his appreciative remark is worth quot-ing: It is to the magic of the tub and towel that the matchless complexion and the superb figures of the English women are due."

BARDARIAN SHREWDNESS.

Wonderful Instinct of the Tiger Hunt-

The "Yankee nation" takes great credit to itself for its ingenuity, but a wider acquaintance with the world would probably lessen its pretensions. Wild animals and uncivilized men-all creatures, in short, who live by their wits-have almost of necessity the quality of shrewdness highly developed, at least in certain directions.

Capt. Lugard, the African traveler, quotes his brother as expressing the highest admiration for "the wonderful instinct" of the jungle tribe of practiced tiger shooting.

"If you dropped a Gond from a bal-loon in the heart of a forest unknown to him, and then suddenly 'went for, him with a thick stick, he would take the identical path that a tiger would adopt, and it would be found to be the shortest possible way out of the jun-

Capt. Lugard bears a similar testimony to the ready wit of the Swahilis, natives of east Africa. He had occasion to build a fort with all speed, and for that purpose he needed poles. They were difficult to procure, but as he re marks: "The Swahili is a wonderful fellow when pressed, for 'making bricks without straw.' ' Not a tree was in sight, and there were only a dozen axes for two hun-dred and fifty men; but he sent all hands out after timber. Each man was to bring a log, or two men might bring one log, if it was exceptionally large, and only after that was done were they to be at liberty to collect their own food for the day. And the logs were brought. In Capt. Lugard's

"Tell a Swahili he has to produce a pole before he can eat his dinner, and though you cannot see a tree on the horizon, he will arrive with a pole before you have decided in your mind which is the best direction in which to start your search."

Trapped by a Photograph.

Here is a curious little story told by FRENCH & an English solicitor. He had among his clients a few years ago a notorious company promoter, whose financial af-fairs came to grief. One day, happening to pass by a stationer's shop, his attention was attracted by a portrait of Mr. -, the well-known barrister. Mr. - was attired in a wig and gown and in his hand he held a paper on which the solicitor's sharp eyes enught the name of his client. His curiosity aroused, he purchased the photograph and proceeded to decipher the words of Mr. —'s brief, speedily discovering that they indicated that a warrant was "out" for the arrest of his client. In a few hours the man of finance was out of England.

A Fitting Term. "Why do you use such peculiar terms?" asked a lawyer's wife of her husband, who had returned worn out by his day's labors. "I don't see how you can have been working all day like a horse." "Well, my dear," he replied, "I've been drawing a conveyance all day; and if that isn't working like a horse, what is?"
