BURTONIAN PARADOX.

Strange Views Regarding the Nature of Womankind.

A Philosopher Who Entertained the Betief That Women Were Fascinated by Blood, Cruelty and Angulsh -Experiments on the Senses. .

Woman is a paradox and the mother of paradoxes, says the Boston Journal.
A careful study of the history of the world will convince any man of judi-eial mind that Bayle did not go too far -perhaps did not go far enoughwhen he observed, apropos of the treatment of Arideus and Eurydice by Olympias, "that if on one side women are generally more tender than men it is certain on the other that those who are fired with a spirit of cruelty and ambition go greater lengths than men in those two vices." Bayle did not go far enough. For if in a savage state the female warrior is most to be dreaded by a foe, and if the female has been and is first in scenes of bloody worship and torture, so in popular uprisings, as in the French revolution and in our day the commune, or in the history of nihilism, or in police courts where the question of maltreatment of children is brought before the public, it is woman that plays the most horrid part.

Philosophers of old argued concerning this paradox. They admitted the tenderness, they knew of the sanguinary and ferocious possibilities bound up with this tenderness. Some ascribed the cause to hysteria, as did Democritus, the physician. Others, as de la Mothe le Vayer, argued on each side and could not frame a final answer. It was reserved for an Englishman. who of all men had probably studied most thoroughly the manners and customs of humanity, barbarous and civilized-it was reserved for Sir Richard Eurton to advance the theory that even the love of woman for nursing the sick at home and in hospital arose from the fascination exerted over her by blood and cruelty and the sight of bodily or mental anguish. According to this theory, Florence Nightingale, the amazon of Dahomey, the petroleuse, and Goncourt's Faustin studying the agony of Lord Annandale, stood on the same platform. A monstrons theory! But history unfortunately furnishes in support of it illustrations from the earliest records to the chapter as yet unfinished. It is not at all improbable that a key to this paradox is supplied by the experiments of Profs. Nicholls and Browne, who try to demonstrate that the senses are less keen in woman They began with the than in man. sense of smell. They took odoriferous substances, such as garlie and prussie acid. These were diluted in a growing proportion, until in the last set there was one part of the test substance to 2,000,000 parts of water. Then fortyfour men and thirty-eight women. young and healthy, were told to re-arrange these bottles, which had been put in disorder, and by the sense of smell to arrange each set by itselfgarlic with garlic, essence of cloves with cloves. The women failed. They could not distinguish the lemon beyond 100,000 parts, while the men told it at 250,000. The women could not trace prussic acid beyond the dilution of 20,000 parts of one; the men, or nearly all of them, distinguished it up to perception of every other sense; that woman does not require, as the male. such keenness. And the conclusion is drawn that "Nicety of the senses on woman's part would be a grave disadperform without repugnance, and even | ersly with pleasure, a thousand functions against which man would revolt." Here is a humane answer to the paradox of Burton.

But will women, if they first of all agree to the paradox, be content with the answer? Will they be willing to remember that there is here no talk considering intellectuality or morality? Will they admit that "The senses belong to the animal structure of humanity, and reasoning beings do not dispute that the male is the superior strong drink. animal?" If they protest against this position, pray wlfat other answer can they make to the Burtonian paradox?

MOTTO TO COATS-OF-ARMS.

The Motto Ought Really Not to Contain More Than Eight Syllables

The art of composing the motto was subjected to severe rules. The "body" and the "soul" were required to be in such relation to each other that the "soul" should invariably explain the "body." The legend must be concise. neatly turned and ingeniously suggestive-like the "Desdichado" of the disinherited knight in "Ivanhoe," says the Year Round.

It had always to be applicable to the person as well as to the material object forming the "body," and it must not be drawn from things unknown, nor must it be too enigmatic or too facile, too humble, or above all, too arrogant.

Again, it was essential that the figure should be agreeable to the eye and its idea to the mind. Finally the device was perfect only when the "body" was unique and the "soul," or motto: in a language which was not the mother tongue of him who bore it.

The motto ought not to contain more than eight syllables. That of our order of the Garter, "Honi soit qui mal y pense," contains only seven: that of our kings, "Dieu et mon droit," only four. The device of Leo X. was a yoke with "Suave" for the motto-"The yoke of the Lord is sweet." That of Henry III., king of France and Poland, two crowns on the earth and one up above, with the motto: "Manet ultima coelo:" that of Charles V., the pillars of Hercules, and the legend, "Ne plus ultra."

Devices went out of vogue in the seventeenth century, and now survive only in the coats-of arms of the older families, where the reader, if he be so disposed, may study them at leisure and examine how nearly they approach the ideal embodied in the foregoing rules.

FRAUDS IN ANTIQUITIES. Ancient Treasures Manufactured in Rus sia and Freely Sold as Originals. The ingenious Russian peasantry seem to have been developing with rather restless rapidity a taste for ancient art, not with the view of enjoying the possession of its treasures, but of passing them off upon eager collectors. It seems, from a recent statement by M. Reinach, says the Illustrated London News, that within the last fifteen years a regular system of manufacturing antiquities has been carried on in certain villages in southern Russia, especially in the governments of Kherson and Taurida. It is admitted that the imitations are often as good as the originals might be-supposing any originals to exist-for the modern Russians of those parts seem to have inherited a highly inventive faculty from their Grant ancestors.

The objects are especially confined to gold and silver ornaments, in which the Crimea is generally said to have been at one time peculiarly rich. The museum of Odessa has not escaped imposition, and it is even whispered that the antiquaries and archaeologists of that city have on more than one occasion devoted the time of their meetings to the discussion and admiration of objects of very doubtful origin. The remarkable thing about these forgeries, apart from the skill shown in working in an antique style, is the knowledge of ancient Greek which the forgers display. In one case an inscription of six hundred letters was introduced into an ornament, and no gram matical or orthographical fault was discovered by those by whom it was examined. Terra cotta figures more or less resembling those of Tanagra are also produced in large numbers in some districts of southern Russia, but these are chiefly exported, while the gold and silver objects are retained for home consumption.
