Read carefully here: It was such an immense shipment that the Steamer DALLES CITY, partly on this account and because of the high water, was not successful in reaching her landing at the Cascades the first time; was obliged to put back to Bonnevillie, unload other freight and try again, when success crowned her efforts, and without unloading any of our shoes. To partly compensate our friends for the delay, we give them the opportunity of selecting from this new stock, this day only, at Diphtheria Cases.

Lettie, the 11 year old daughter of J. A. McKellar, is down with the diphtheria and is attended by Dr. Sutherland. The family live on the bluff, at the east end of town, and the residence is quarantined.

Katy Phelps, the 11-year-old daughter of Mr. C. W. Phelps, is also very ill with the same disease. Dr. O. C. Hollister is the attending physician. The residence is on Ninth street, and has been properly quarantined.

Grace Henriksen, 10 years of age, is a third case of the disease, who resides with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. Henriksen, in the pines. It is probable that a child in a neighboring family is also afflicted with the dread malady. Er. Eshelman reports these cases.

THE COXEYS ARRIVE.

They Steal a Train and Then an Engine and Come On.

The 507 men which have bored Troutdale nearly to death the last few days succeeded in getting away from that point about 9 o'clock this morning. To this end they made two coup d'etats.

The special freight which left Portland last night was sidetracked when it reached Troutdale. The men boarded the cars, but the engineer succeeded in cutting loose from the train and made his way to The Dalles with the engine. In this train was thirteen empty box cars.

They secured an engine to pull it this morning. Engineer Barrett and Conductor Fowler passed through The Dalles last night with a special train, having on board Officials Dickenson, Baxter and Borie, who were on a tour of inspection, bound for Portland. They did not leave the cascades until early this morning, and when at Troutdale the same tactics were pursued as on the evening before. The engine was separated from the cars and attached to the box cars, captured the evening before. Engineer Barrett and Conductor Fowler remained with it and pulled the army into The Dalles this afternoon.

The army arrived in The Dalles about 3:15. The engine was adorned with a swarm of dirty-looking men. On the first car following stood the tallest man of the regiment, the color bearer, holding the stars and stripes. His name is Johnson, 7 feet, 2 inches high, and made still taller by a high silk hat. From out the side doors of the box cars peered many faces, and the caboose was likewise surmounted by a U. S. flag. The engine backed in, but at once proceeded to the turn table, and thence to the coal house, where it was coaled up. About fifty of the industrials guarded the engine, which looked like some moving object among a drove of ants, and their faces were set with determination. Commander Scheffler informed a reporter that he was going as far as possible with the captured train and trust to circumstances for the result. He said the present number of men was 580, divided into twelve companies. It was his intention to make camp in The Dalles, but hearing that Vancouver troops were in pursuit, decided to move on as quickly as possible and get without the confines of the state.

Among the number were several well-known in The Dalles, who joined the army in Portland, among them Walter Cole, a railroad man. He shook hands with several acquaintances, and promised to open up the shoe factory when he returned. The train pulled out of town without waiting for supper, with the same engine that pulled them in, Barrett's. Barrett himself pulled the train out, being probably instructed by the company to do so.

Everybody in The Dalles feels that they got off luckily. Before another issue we expect to hear of the army coming in conflict with U. S. troops and the leaders arrested.

Nothing could be gleaned at this point as to what the company propose to do, but we are assured they are taking every measure possible to prevent the men from appropriating trains to their own uses. They cannot be intercepted at The Dalles, but it is probable that on reaching Pendleton they will be met by U. S. troops from Walla Walla and the leaders arrested.

Their stay at Troutdale was not marked by any violence, but the people of that little town were getting very tired of them, as they had begun to grow insolent. Notwithstanding the exceedingly fair treatment they had received at the hands of the citizens in the little town they had begun to grow ugly, and serious results were feared unless immediate action was taken by the county authorities. Ed Sheehan, superintendent of the Union Meat Company's stockyards at Troutdale, wired their principals in Portland that a demand had been made upon him by the leaders of the army for meat, and that he had given them several sheep. Messrs. O'Shea and Spaulding sent word to him at once to give them what meat they wanted, but, under no consideration, to allow them to trespass upon the company's property. The army had made threats to occupy the company's buildings.

Marshal Grady, with 50 deputy marshals, visited Troutdale, Wednesday, where by injunction proceedings he restrained the army from using the company's depot. No sooner had the marshals left than the injunction was disregarded. The depot was again taken possession of and the army declared their intention of holding it.

Sheriff Kelly then sent the following to Governor Penney: "I am reliably and credibly informed that there is a crowd of lawless people congregated at Troutdale, in this county and state, which is a menace to the peace, good order and welfare of the community. Property, I am informed, is in danger, and I make a request of you, as commander-in-chief of the militia of the state, for a sufficient force to keep the peace and good order of the state."

The governor sent the following reply: "I am in receipt of your request of this date upon me as commander-in-chief of the militia for a sufficient force to keep the peace and good order in the state, simply because there is a crowd of lawless people congregated at Troutdale.

You do not allege any actual breach of the peace. This is a civil and not a military government, and it is your duty to exercise the civil power to quell any disturbance when it occurs, and not to call upon the militia before it occurs."

Upon his failure to secure any assistance from the governor, Sheriff Kelly secured about 30 men and proceeded to Troutdale, but when the Portland force arrived at Troutdale about 7:45 Thursday they found everything quiet. There was not a sign of the anti-workers around the deserted station. Further investigation developed the fact that the army was packing up and preparing to move.

4:45 p. m.—It is reported that U. S. troops are in waiting at Arlington to intercept the Coxeyites.
