APRIL ANNOTATIONS.

Leaves From the Notebook of Chronicle Reporters.

Next Saturday will be the last of the Smith soirees.

Do not forget the Silent concert at the M. E. church at 8 p. m. Tuesday evening.

The river is on a standstill at this place and fell three inches at Arlington last night.

The funeral of Mrs. Christing Wagonblast took place this afternoon from the Methodist church.

A letter addressed to Q. H. Biggs, care CHRONICLE office, will be handed the owner upon application.

This is the last day for taxes without costs attached. After tonight those who have not paid will be delinquent.

Some woman in sympathy with the Coxey army handed up a dressed chicken to them on their arrival in The Dalles Saturday.

The first sale of the season of the new wool clip was sold to Samuel Wilkinson from Walter G. Odell, from the Wasco warehouse.

We have it on good authority that Mr. Tony Noltner, an old-time Oregon journalist of the democratic persuasion, is to reopen the Wasco County Sun.

Mr. S. P. M. Briggs has resigned his position with Pease & Mays to take effect tomorrow, and has accepted a like situation with A. M. Williams & Co. His services will begin June 1st.

A Coxeyite was run over by a Union Pacific train in lower Pendleton Friday morning. The poor man was washing a change of linen under the bridge and the train, an engine and 30 loaded cars, passed over him. This ghastly joke is perpetrated by the Oregonian.

Rev. J. W. Adams called today to say that there will be a campmeeting held in Tygh Valley, beginning Thursday, May 24th and will be conducted by J. W. Adams of Dufur and others. There will be some able speakers present, and a general invitation is extended to everyone to attend.

Postmaster Nolan joined the returning Coxeyites Saturday night, but deserted them at Crates Point and "drilled" home. When he boarded the train at the depot he intended to jump off at the Umatilla house but at that point the train was going about twenty-five miles an hour. The conductor slackened the train and allowed him to get off when three miles from the city.

General Conditions Good.

Editor CHRONICLE. When we go out to observe what Providence has done for the people of Wasco county we see the hills carpeted with the best growth of grass that has been for years; all kinds of stock are in good condition on the range and no loss during the winter; the sheepmen report one of the best lambings for years; and the prospect should be the most promising in the history of the county. But when we turn on the other side we meet the face of Satan with the heinous, distorted face of free trade looking our industry in the face and saying, "you must surrender your rights in behalf of Australian and cheap labor countries, for the great Grover Cleveland says unless you can compete with cheap labor countries you must go to the wall." If it was not for this crushing Cleveland policy Wasco county and The Dalles would see the brightest business season in the history of the county. But the people of Oregon are preparing for battle, and when the June election is passed the voice of the people of this great state will show to the world the greatest republican majority ever cast in Oregon. The people are all educated, standing ready to vote for protection for American industries, high price for wheat and wool and something of still more importance, maintenance of high wages for all working classes. If the voters claim the power, then why stand back and allow some demagogue to lead you to the polls and make you vote to bring you down to the level of pauper labor of foreign land? Now is the time to open your eyes and say, I am an American citizen and my vote must go this year for true American principle first, last and all the time, and when every man votes for his own interest he votes for the interest of his neighbor, and this grand country of freedom, that grants equal rights and suffrage to all—the greatest and grandest country on the globe. J. C. MURPHY.

THE CAPTURE.

The Commonwealth Army Ran Right Into a Trap.

All of Arlington turned out Saturday evening to see the commonwealers captured by the Walla Walla troops. The soldiers marched down the track a quarter of a mile to the lower switch, where they were posted, a part behind a train of empty cars on a sidetrack, and the others behind rocks and sand dunes. A flagman went down the track and placed torpedoes on it at intervals. About 6 o'clock the steam of the approaching train was seen and the shout went up, "There they come." As the train came up it shut off steam for a moment, and it was expected the army would not run into the trap; but in a minute a white cloud arose from the smokestack, then the whistle for the station sounded. As the train came nearer American flags were seen waving from the top of the engine cab.

In a moment the red flag was wildly waved by the flagman, and the engineer answered with short blasts of the whistle. Then the torpedoes exploded in rapid succession, and as the train slowed down the soldiers rushed from their hiding places and there was an ominous clicking of gunlocks. A sergeant and three men with loaded arms boarded the engine, and Engineer Ollie Barrett gladly gave them charge of it. As the soldiers boarded the engine, a half dozen of the anti-workers jumped from it with amazing rapidity. At the open side doors of the 11 box-cars the heads of numbers of the men were visible, and a number were on the platforms and roof. Not a man of them was allowed to leave the cars. Soon the soldiers clambered on the roofs of the cars and the captured train was slowly pulled into the station. As it passed the crowds of citizens, the anti-workers repeatedly cheered. Reaching the station the soldiers alighted and guarded their prisoners until Marshal Grady arrived, at 6:30.

Marshal Grady and Colonel Compton held a short conference. Then the industrials in the caboose were ordered out, and it was searched. Marshal Grady picked out three of its occupants as the ringleaders and ordered them back in the caboose, with a cavalryman at each door. The anti-workers were then ordered out of the cars, stood in line and searched by the cavalrymen. Three revolvers and a miscellaneous collection of butcher-knives, razors and shears were found and confiscated. After being searched the men were sent back in the cars and soldiers put on guard at the doors.

Arrived at Portland, says the Oregonian, the captured train was sidetracked just opposite the Southern Pacific station on the East Side, and within a stone's throw of where the California company of anti-workers had pitched their camp but ten days ago. A fresh detachment of soldiers was ordered out, and stationed about the cars. Then the doors were thrown open, and the prisoners given a breath of fresh air. Marshal Grady at once had them "line up" to be counted, and to his chagrin he found but 434, whereas the number confined at Arlington was 507. Nearly 75 had escaped during the night, probably by dropping off while the train was in motion. Among the missing was "Major" Schler.

Fifty-two of the ringleaders were confined in jail and 387 men were guarded in the box cars. None of them had had anything to eat since leaving Troutdale, nearly twenty-four hours before. Sheriff

Kelly made arrangements for rations, enough for three square meals, but the army were so hungry they consumed the entire amount at one sitting. At last accounts they are still under arrest, and no definite steps as to their final disposal have as yet been taken.

SUNSET COX KNEW HIS MAN.

How the New Yorker Limited the Time Allowed to Joe Cannon.

Representative Cannon, of Illinois, recently told a Washington Post man a good story on himself. It is reminiscent of the days when "Sunset" Cox was in congress. The New York representative had had some things to say about a citizen of Mr. Cannon's state, and the Illinois man wanted to defend his constituent.

"Will the gentleman from New York yield to me?" said Mr. Cannon.

"Certainly," said Mr. Cox.

"For how long?" inquired the speaker.

"As long as the gentleman from Illinois will keep his hands in his pockets," said Mr. Cox, laughingly.

Mr. Cannon accepted the terms and proceeded with his remarks. He uttered just one sentence and a half, and then his hands, which had been snugly tucked into his pockets, came out and were flying through the air like a couple of windmills.

"Time's up," said Mr. Cox, who knew his man, and then Mr. Cannon sat down.

Anybody who has seen Mr. Cannon gesticulate will appreciate the spirit with which he tells of his first and only effort to talk without the use of his arms.

HOW LICORICE IS GROWN.

The Plant Becomes Fully Grown in About Four Years.

As grown in Pontefract, England, where three hundred acres are under cultivation, the plants are grown in rows and attain a proper size in about four years. If allowed to grow five years the root is tough and woody. During the last two years, the plants being small, potatoes and vegetables can be grown between the rows, and these are of a superior sort, as the licorice ground is heavily manured. The roots extend downward from four to six feet, and as they are dug up by hand the expense is quite an item. The digging takes place in September. The roots are stored in a cool place or packed in hand. They are next trimmed of all superfluous shoots and fibers, which are ground into powder, while the root proper is used for its juice. The buds and runners of the plant are saved, as it is from these that new roots are grown and not from seed.
