

A LONG PROCESSION of diseases start from a torpid liver and impure blood. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures every one of them. It prevents them, too. In building up needed flesh and strength, and to purify and enrich the blood, nothing can equal the "Discovery." It invigorates the liver and kidneys, promotes all the bodily functions, and brings back health and vigor. For Dyspepsia, "Liver Complaint," Biliousness, and all Scrofulous, Skin and Scalp Diseases, it is the only remedy that's guaranteed to benefit or cure, or the money is refunded.

THE MERRY-GO-ROUND.

How the Remarkable Beasts of Carrouseis Are Produced.

A New York Factory Which Turns Out Menageries by the Dozen and Realizes Handsome Profits from Christians and Heathens.

Lions, unicorns, tigers, hippogriffs, camels, dragons, elephants and eels, as well as horses and jackasses, are made right here in New York, in a factory over on the east side, every working day of the year. They are, says the Evening Star, of the excited, rampant, startling, unique and often preposterous kind, seen in the "carrouseis" at Coney Island, in the Central Park, and many other places. When the carrousel was first invented, in Italy, in the tenth century, when it was popularized in France a few hundred years later, and in fact, until recent times, people were satisfied with wooden horses, or jackasses, to ride on their merry-go-rounds. But modern genius, particularly the American kind of it, has utilized most of the animal forms found in the menagerie and the fanciful of heraldry, to give a grotesque picture to the carrousel. In fact, the wooden animals generally approximate so closely to their original models that one has no difficulty in recognizing them. The elephant's trunk prevents his being looked upon as a lion; the camel's two humps render it perfectly easy to distinguish him from the jackass, and anybody who will take the trouble to observe the nature upon the deer will not make the mistake of confounding him with the horse. But there is a point in their production when differences are far from plain. That is when they are built up for the carvers. Each animal is made up of a series of pieces of two-inch square or basswood plank, firmly glued together so as to leave plenty of wood for chiseling and gouging away for development of the desired form, yet keep the inside of the body hollow. At this stage the camel looks something like this:

Very heavy basswood planks are glued on the sides of the built-up pile. Legs, ears and heads are sawed out in apparently shapeless chunks of wood, and are attached to the built-up bodies, either before or after carving, according to circumstances.

The carvers are skillful workmen, deft in wielding mallet, chisel and gouge, and under their expert manipulation the clumsy pile of angles is speedily rounded and shaped. But it is not every carver who can do this work. In fact, those who can are very scarce. One must have a natural talent for it, something of the sculptor's genius, to develop by his keen tools the figure of an animal from the clumsy mass of wood laid before him, and to give its features expression. Expressional is that is where they just turn themselves loose. Their employer does not interfere with their giving free rein to their fancy, and such excited, startled and enraged expressions as they put upon these beasts are often both amusing and amusing. The boss is proud of their achievements in this line. He says: "There is a drovny, conservative tone about the English animals, while ours are sharp, animated, vigorous, vivacious." Oh, yes, they are; very vivacious, indeed! And even if you have some doubts whether the lion is roaring with laughter or with rage, you at least have the delight of knowing that he is doing something, and doing it very earnestly, too, with no "drovny, conservative tone" about him.

From the hands of the carvers the animals go to the paint shop, where they first receive a heavy coat of brown body color, and they are tinted up with as free and untrammelled fancy as animated the genius that gave them their vivacious expressions. The results may well rattle the mind of a child that has preconceived the idea based upon observations in the menageries, but perhaps nature would have made the world much gay and more gorgeous if she had had the chance to take some points from these carrousel animals. Strict fidelity to nature may obtain in the blue, or even the green, unicorn, for aught that anybody knows to the contrary, and possibly the hippogriff is born with all that gliding on him; but what shall be said of the carmine lion or the rose-pink elephant? Finally the animals that should have hairy tails are provided with them—portions of real ones cut from cattle—and then they are all boxed up for shipment along with the awning and hand organ, and the sectional platform, and the central pole from which the whole machine is to depend, and the cog-wheels that are to make it go around, and the guys and braces that are to prevent it from falling down, and the boxing to hide the iron work from man who turns the crank, and the little wheels to jab at rings with, and the iron rings to be jabbed at, with the brass one that gives a free ride next time to the boy lucky enough to seize it.

Carrouseis are only made to order, and it takes two or three months to get one up, according to its size. A little one, supplied only with eight horses and two chariots, can be not complete for from $300 to $350, according to finish. From that the scale for choice goes up to the mammoth concern forty feet in diameter, with eighteen arms, carrying thirty-five horses, two camels, two elephants, two deer, two lions, two jackasses and three double-seat dragon chariots, which may cost as much as $2,500, in dependent of the steam-engine to drive it and the music machinery. The organs range in price from $100 to $2,000, and the extra cylinders accompanying them from $35 to $125 each.

Some years this establishment turns out forty or fifty carrouseis. And they are sent all over the world. One has been sent from here to Melbourne, Australia; another is just being shipped to Port-au-Prince, and an extraordinarily vivacious set of animals are now being created to go to Kingston, Jamaica. Single figures are frequently supplied, to take the place of broken ones, or to stimulate, by novelty, the flagging interest of youth. They range in price from $14 to $30. The camel is most expensive, and the lion, at $40, comes next.

A GIRL SNAKE-KILLER.

With a Stick, She Destroyed Five Copperheads.

Clara Greth, a fifteen-year-old girl, living with her parents on the outskirts of Reading, Pa., who had some thrilling experiences with rattlesnakes and copperheads last summer, was sitting on the front steps the other morning, when she spied a big copperhead sunning himself on the sloping bank opposite the house.

She was plucky and self-reliant, and without telling anybody she determined to kill it. Taking up a shovel from the coal shed, she ran over to the bank, where she found three copperheads instead of one, and they all showed fight. She quickly dispatched two of them, but the third and largest one repeatedly leaped at her. After a short struggle, however, she succeeded in stretching it out dead with its companions, says the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette.

As soon as she could recover her breath she examined the ground carefully and came to the conclusion that the snakes must have come out of a large hole beside an old fence post. So she kept an eye on the place during the rest of the morning, and late in the afternoon was delighted to see a big copperhead come up and coil himself in the sunshine near the post hole.

She crept up behind it noiselessly and contrived to place herself between it and the post hole before the reptile was aware of her presence. She then struck it with a heavy stone, but missed her mark, whereupon the snake sprang wickedly at her bare feet. She jumped back lightly, just in time to escape the blow. Then, before the enraged reptile could strike again, she hurled another stone at it, this time with truer aim, and broke its back.

But no sooner had she made sure of that snake than a fifth one, bigger than any of the others, made its appearance. It fought hard, but she attacked it fearlessly. No more stones of effective size were near at hand, so the brave girl picked up a stout stick, and with this she tackled her adversary at close quarters. In a short time she came out best with it, too.

Then she proceeded to lay the snakes out in a row, with their heads sloping down the bank. When her father, David Greth, returned from work that evening and saw the five reptiles lying there, he was thunderstruck, and could scarcely believe that his little daughter had effected the slaughter alone.

DOGS THAT WENT FISHING.

A Newfoundland That Was Foud of Catching Crabs.

I once knew two dogs that took great delight in catching crabs, says a writer in Forest and Stream, not soft crabs, but lusty, hard ones, capable of making a good fight. When about twelve years of age I used to spend my vacations at a large farm on a tributary of the Chesapeake bay. The favorite dog was another boy and two dogs at this house. One of the dogs was a large Newfoundland, and the other was one of those medium-sized, puzzling combinations of short hair and no particular color—probably an all-around dog as compared with the others.

One day I went out fishing in the shallow water at the foot of the yard and evidently searching for something. I found that he was looking for crabs. When a crab was discovered he would prance around it, and, after making several attempts, seize it in his mouth and bring it up on the beach, and then play with it, much as a cat does with a mouse, until the poor crab was either dead or helplessly exhausted. He seemed to do this for the mere sport of the thing, bawling all the time in a tone that denoted excitement rather than anger. He never ate the crabs after killing them. The crabs fought back to the best of their ability, and it was often difficult to say which had the tightest grip, dog or crab, for the crab would fasten on to some portion of the dog's mouth with both of his powerful pinchers, and it would require much shaking before he would drop off.

Persons who sympathize with the afflicted will rejoice with D. E. Carr of 1235 Harrison street, Kansas City. He is an old sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism, but has not heretofore been troubled in this climate. Last winter he went up into Wisconsin, and in consequence has had another attack. "It came upon me very acute and severe," he said. "My joints swelled and became inflamed; sore to touch or almost to look at. Upon the urgent request of my mother-in-law I tried Chamberlain's Pain Balm to reduce the swelling and ease the pain, and to my agreeable surprise, it did both. I have used three fifty-cent bottles and believe it to be the finest thing for rheumatism, pains and swellings extant. For sale by Blakeley & Houghton, druggists.
