Editor Kincaid, republican nominee for secretary of state, is strongly in favor of the re-enactment of the mortgage tax law. He contends that: "The repeal of those laws had placed a burden on land almost equal to the taxes on all the foreign capital loaned on mortgages in Oregon; say $30,000,000 or $40,000,-000, making an aggregate annual tax for county, state, municipal and 2 school purposes of perhaps $1,200,000, which must now be paid in addition to the interest on money. The interest is not one dollar less now, when paid by the nominal owners of the mortgaged property, under the new law, than it was when paid by the lenders of the money, the real owners of the property, or was deducted from the interest, under the old law. On the contrary, interest is now higher than it was before, and taxes are added to the interest instead of being deducted from it." This is the popular feeling throughout the country districts, and although the secretary of state has no vote in legislation, will have a tendency to crystalize the rura! population in favor of Mr. Kincaid's candidacy .- Portland Sunday Mercury

THEIR U. ...KKNIFE. The Much-Cherished Treasure of Two Yankee Boys.

"A Yankee boy is not much until he begins to whittle and owns a knife," says Rev. Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, in his autobiography. That is especially true on a farm, and it was a great day for Cyrus and his brother Hannibal-the future founder of Robert college in Constantinople, and the future vice presi-dent of the United States-when a neighbor offered to pay their mother for a ball of her fine butter with a knife for the boys. She accepted the bargain and they received the knife, which they owned in common.

It was a homely, horn-handled imple-ment, but the blade was of the best steel, and they soon became experts in its use for purposes of whittling, rough carving, and making sleds for coasting and carrying wood. It was the most cherished object which they possessed, and when it was lost or mislaid there was woe and distraction in the household until it was found again.

Once it was lost in . midwinter, and when, after a long search in vain, it was found accidentally in the snow by little Cyrus, the boy dashed home through the drifts with the recovered treasure in his hands, shouting ecstat-"I've found the knife! I've ically: found the knife!"

But an admired cousin of the boys, a Harvard student, who had visited the farm in summer, had seen the knife, and judging it probably more by outward appearance than intrinsic worth, thought they might do better; so, after his return to college, he sent the lads two fine knives, far handsomer and better than their old friend. These were brought to them one morning by their elder sister, Susan, who came early to their room and, displaying the fascinating objects, said, scuately:

"These have just come from Henry Upham, but if you take them you must give up your old one."

The boys exchanged glances; the temptation was great; the knives were beautiful-but discard their first love! Never! There was a moment's pause; then one whispered to the other: "Le us not do it!" He acquiesced, and turn-ing to his sister, exclaimed, with an air

"Send back those knives to Henry Upham, and tell him we don't want

But the mischievous Susan burst out laughing, and answered: "You deserve The weather has been fine for the them all, and you shall have them. only did it to try you."

The new beauties were given to them, and the brothers kept and used them. The old knife was consigned to the honorable retirement of a bureau drawer, where it rusted peacefully for

A Woman's Willfalness.

"Admiral Farragut's death was due to the selfishness of a woman," Rev. James J. Kane, chaplain of the Brooklyn navy yard, said in a recent lecture. 'The admiral and his wife were coming from California when a woman occupying a seat in front of them in the car opened a window. Admiral Farragut was ill, and the strong draught of wind which blew directly upon him chilled him. Mrs. Farragut asked the woman, courteously if she would not kindly close the window, as it was annoying to her husband. The woman snapped out: 'No, I won't close the window. I don't care if it does annoy him. I'm not going to be smothered for him.' Admiral Farragut thus
