WONDERFUL POWER OF COAL

Man Recklessly Squandering His Future Support. How long can the earth sustain life? is always an interesting question, and Sir Robert Ball discussed it in his usual fascinating way in the Fortnightly Review. "A very large part of the boasted advance of civilization is merely of an increased power of squandering. For what are we doing every day but inventing appliances to exhaust with ever greater rapidity the hoard of coal? There are just a certain number of tons of coal lying in the earth, and when these are gone there can be no more for the future. There is no manufacture of coal in progress at the present time. The useful mineral was the product of a very singular period of the earth's history, the like of which has not again occurred in any noteworthy degree in the geological ages which have since run their course. Our steam engines are methods of spending this hoard; and what we often hear lauded as some triumph in human progress is merely the development of some fresh departure in a frightful extravagance. We would just regard a man as guilty of expending his substance wastefully if he could not perform a journey without a coach-and-six and half a dozen outriders, and yet we insist that the great steamers that take us across the Atlantic shall be driven at a speed which requires engines, let us say, of twelve thousand horse-power. If the number of passengers on such a vessel be set down at five hundred, we have for each passenger the united force of twenty-four horses, night and day, throughout the voyage. I expect our descendants will think that our coal cellars have been emptied in a very wasteful manner, particularly when they reflect that if we had been content with a speed somewhat less than that at present demanded the necessary consumption of coal would have been reduced in a far greater proportion than the mere alteration of speed would imply. The coal of England may last a century or two; the coal in other parts of the globe may supply our cellars for a few months more; but the exhaustion of this truly marvelous product is proceeding at an accelerated pace. Doubtless the end of the coal, at least as an article of mighty commerce, will arrive within a period brief in comparison with the ages of human existence. In the history of humanity from first to last the few centuries through which we are now passing will stand out prominently as the coal-burning period."

MONSTER OCEAN ROLLERS WHICH ARE CAUSED BY STRONG DOWNWARD CURRENTS. The sea has in store one danger that the landsman never sees. Like the voyager, he may receive a visit from a cyclone, but he knows nothing of the power and terror of great waves. Uniting in themselves the force of a flood and that of a tornado, they are appalling and restless. The recent experience of the Normannia, which suffered severe damage, is from the visit of one of those monsters of the deep, and recalls that of other vessels. But the Rochester Courier and Advertiser says this wave was slight compared with the waves that they have encountered. While it injured only several of the Normannia's crew, the wave that struck the Italian bark Rosina in October, 1888, swept every man aboard but one into the sea; he escaped only because he was an invalid below. A hundred persons lost their lives from the wave encountered by the steamer San Francisco in December, 1858. The height of these waves can hardly be realized. The one encountered by the Umbria five years ago arose to the top of her masthead, fifty feet above the sea. Several waves measured by Capt. Kiddle, of the Celtic, in January, 1875, rose to the height of seventy feet and moved at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour. Equally high waves were observed by Admiral Fitzroy, of the English navy, off the Cape of Good Hope. The appalling height of one hundred feet was reached by the waves that Dumont d'Urville saw in the Southern sea.

Of course nothing could withstand the weight and force of these masses of water. Under them the most powerful vessel ever built would scarcely be more than an egg shell. There is no doubt that many of the ships that have gone down to sea never to return have fallen victims of their pitiless and relentless force. As to the origin of the great waves there has of late been some interesting speculation. It has been discovered that they are confined to the temperate latitudes. In these latitudes it has been discovered further that the surface of the ocean is often struck during storms by powerful downward currents. The conclusion is drawn from these two facts that the waves in question were the products of these vertical currents. Students of the subject claim in support of this conclusion that the most powerful wind blowing over the surface of the sea could not raise a crest above twenty-five feet.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

One of Those Touches of Nature That Make the Whole World Kin. Ten o'clock in the building of the big city paper. The electric lights are burning and the whirl of presses and click of types make a busy scene. Editors, reporters, proof-readers are busy preparing the day's doings for the morrow. The door of the chief's office, says the Detroit Free Press, is pushed carefully open, and a blue-eyed, flaxen-haired maiden of six summers and as many winters enters. Nobody knows how she got there. Nobody saw her climb the stairs or walk through the hall. She is ragged, dirty and has been crying.

"Is you the editor-man?"

"Yes, little one; what can I do for you?"

"Rube is dead. An' I thought may be you'd like to tell about it?"

"Who is Rube?"

"Why, didn't you ever hear of Rube?"

"You see, there are so many people that I can't know them all."

The big-bearded man was actually ashamed of his ignorance.

"But Rube wasn't people—he was my brother. He sold papers an' blacked boots and all that. He wasn't very rich an' ma said the city man would buy him—but he was good to me."

"Did you sell papers, too?"

"No, I stayed home, but Rube brought me candy dogs an' candy roosters and licked bad boys that made me cry. An' if you'd told folks how good he was, maybe they'd think better of him."

"What do you want me to say, little one?"

"Why, that he was twelve years old in 'was helpin' mother and—oh, I don't know—but member he was always good to me."

Before the little mourner left the office she was the recipient of a handful of coins donated by "the boys" of the office and the big editor ordered the auditor to accompany her home.

Thus it happened that the readers of the great paper were mildly astonished to read on the morning's local page: DIED—Yesterday, Rube, the newsboy, aged twelve years. He was the support of his widowed mother and loved his little sister better than life almost. He was buried in the potter's field last night.

Deafness Cannot be Cured. By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness caused by catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

"It came upon me very acute and severe," he said. "My joints swelled and became inflamed; sore to touch or almost to look at. Upon the urgent request of my mother-in-law I tried Chamberlain's Pain Balm to reduce the swelling and ease the pain, and to my agreeable surprise, it did both. I have used three fifty-cent bottles and believe it to be the finest thing for rheumatism, pains and swellings extant. For sale by Blakeley & Houghton, druggists.

PARADOXES OF SCIENCE.

Strange Conditions Which Exist in Compound Substances. The water which drowns us, a fluent stream, can be walked upon as ice, says Blackwood's Magazine. The bullet which, when fired from a musket, carries death, will be harmless if ground to dust before being fired. The crystallized part of the oil of roses, so grateful in its fragrance—a solid at ordinary temperature, though readily volatile—is a compound substance, containing exactly the same elements and exactly the same proportions as the gas with which we light our streets. The tea which we daily drink with great benefit and pleasure, produces palpitations, nervous tremblings and even paralysis, if taken in excess; yet the peculiar organic agent called theine, to which tea owes its qualities, may be taken by itself (as theine, not as tea) without any appreciable effect. The water which will allow our burning thirst arguments it when congealed into snow; so that is stated by explorers of the Arctic regions that the natives "prefer enduring the utmost extremity of thirst rather than attempt to remove it by eating snow." Yet, if the snow be melted, it becomes drinkable water. Nevertheless, although if melted before it enters the mouth it assuages thirst like other water, when melted in the mouth it has the opposite effect. To render this paradox more striking, we have only to remember that ice, which melts more slowly in the mouth, is very efficient in allaying thirst.
