WHEN REPUBLICANS GET IN

The senate has been debating the tariff question for two months, and they ave gotten through the iron schedule. At the same rate it will take a month to agree on the hundreds of changes yet to be made. The bill when they get through with it will be simply a compromise between the present rates of the McKinley bill, and the proposed rates of an average 49.58, the Wilson bill 35.52 from this congress, because the situation will not change, the tariff question will

I have not lost one the equivalent ad valorem rates of the I gave it to. three bills, finding the McKinley bill on and the senate bill as far as it has gone 36.79. The country can expect no relief not be settled, and the present uncertainties will exist indefinitely. The senate will send the bill as amended to the house, and the house will insist in the original Wilson bill, this will drive certain of the protectionist democrats into the opposition, and no result will be reached. What the effect on the high, weight from 1,000 to 1,100 pounds, country will be is hard to toresee. That times cannot get much worse alone gives hope that they may improve. The distrust of capital will not be removed and consequently money will be tight as far as general business is concerned. But the silent mills must start up some time for we must have clothes and articles of trade, but the improvement in business will only be slight, until some definite settlement of the tariff question is made. That settlement will occur when the republicans are once more placed in power even though it be only in one branch of the government. If the democracy will just continue their foolishness until either the senate or house is again republican, they will do the country good service, because in that case the McKinley law will be retained. Should the mongrel bill now left be passed, however, it will require a majority in both houses and a republican president to change it. The country will have all of these things

Senator Gorman in a speech in the senate Wednesday said: "Justice to Louisiana requires a retention of the sugar bounty." He did not express an opinion as to what "justice to Oregon reopinion as to what "justice to Oregon requires concerning the retention of the tariff on wool." Wool and sugar are for Court St., Feb. 1st.

taxation purposes identical, each yields a large revenue and only incidental protection. How then does Gorman satisfy his conscience after insisting on protection for sugar, to turn the point of his dagger towards the heart of the wool industry? Is it sectional lines, or the necessities of his party? Is it because Oregon gives little hope of democratic victories, that protection is given sugar, and wool is placed on the free list? The trouble with Gorman and the democratic party is that they are made on the narrow-gauge plan. They cannot legisnarrow-gauge plan. They cannot legislate for the entire country, and consequently devote their attention to the south. Iron would have gone on the free list and so would coal were it not that Georgia and Alabama have come to the front in those products. Democratic the front in those products. Democratic protection is always one-sided, it is like a Chemeketa stew, all potatoes and no meat. One dose is enough, and now that the people have had it, there can be no doubt as to what their next order will be.

The Wilson bill, now that the senate have sheared it, is simply a caricature of the McKinley bill. They have dyed its hair, trimmed its whiskers and are trying to pass it for the original. The trouble with it is that it is "died in the wool."
