INTERNATIONAL BIMETALISM.

The calling of another international monetary conference is among the near possibilities. Germany and England are suffering from severe business depressions, as indeed is all Europe, and the civilized or semi-civilized nations of Asia. Mr. George Rutledge Gibson, of the banking firm of Watson & Gibson, has returned to New York after a three-months trip abroad, and gives his opinion, which is certainly entitled to respect, of the money situation. We quote a few paragraphs from an article by him pertaining to the subject as follows:

"Deficits exist in every European treasury and new issues of government securities are brought out to make both ends meet, and on account of the small profits of trade and small incentives to any sort of commercial industry, the idle surplus capital of the public readily seeks the new issues of securities of a national and municipal character. The most striking instance, perhaps, of this was the city of Paris 2½ per cent loan, brought out about two months ago which was subscribed for eighty-five times over. Within the last fortnight the Ottoman loan of 80,000 bonds brought out subscriptions of 10,713,000 bonds. The subscriber of one bond got it, under the European plan for supplying small investors first, but the subscriber for 1000 bonds got only six. This loan is not especially attractive, but the entire absence of all temptation or opportunity to invest in commercial enterprises forces this idle capital into these public securities.

"There is no parity of exchange between London and India; no means of translating with perfect certainty the language of the gold pound of Great Britain into the rupee of India, the tael of China, the paper money of the Argentine Republic, the silver dollar of Mexico, the lire of Italy, or the peseta of Spain, and therefore trade is hampered and long contracts are a gamble of the most hazardous description.

"This break in the parity of exchange between the gold standard of Europe and the silver standard of other countries, whose trade Europe solicits, cannot be remedied until some parity of value is established between the two metals. England being one of the greatest international commercial nations in the world, is really the most deeply interested in the restoration of some parity, whatever it may be, between gold and silver.

"Germany is a rival of England in seeking trade with silver using countries, and this foreign trading interest of Germany, acting in union with the depressed agricultural interest, has secured a parliamentary commission in Berlin to examine into the possibility of some international silver agreement. This movement, you understand, originated in the nation which 20 years ago was a demonetizer of silver, and which as lately as the International Monetary conference in Brussels, only a little over a year ago, instructed its delegates to listen to the arguments, but to express no opinion, and thereby gave no aid to the cause of bimetalism.

"The most hopeful political sign that international bimetalism may yet be secured is the fact that constantly converts are being made in London to the overwhelming necessity of some such movements to restore the parity of exchanges between commercial nations. Mr. Balfour, too, the leader of the conservative party in parliament and the nephew of Lord Salisbury, is one of the most ardent advocates of the enormous importance of action in the matter of an international agreement, and the liberal party, holding office now by a slender majority of fourteen is showing signs of political dissolution."

Mr. Gibson seemed to think there was little doubt that with the return to power of the Salisbury regime England would readily agree to international bimetalism.

The Salmon Coming.

The salmon commenced running at the cascades Tuesday, and by Wednesday the river was literally alive with them. The wheels commenced to take them in out of the wet at the rate of two tons or more each. Dip nets were brought into use, and every man that could get one went to dipping. At every drag of the net from one to three or four fine fellows are caught. Around the points of the rocks and in the eddies they fairly swarm in their struggle to reach the sources of the river. Fishermen say it is the May run that for some cause has been delayed, founding their opinion on the fact that the fish are all bluebacks.

BEAUTIFUL IN MIDDLE LIFE.

Ancient and Modern Women Whose Good Looks Lasted Till Late in Life.

Helen of Troy comes upon the stage at the age of forty. Aspasia was thirty-five when married to Pericles, and she was a brilliant figure thirty years thereafter. Cleopatra was past thirty when she met Antony. Diane de Poitiers was thirty-six when she won the heart of Henry II. The king was half her age, but his devotion never changed. Anne of Austria was thirty-eight when described as the most beautiful woman in Europe. Mme. de Maintenon was forty-three when united to Louis, and Catherine of Russia thirty-three when she seized the throne she occupied thirty-five years. Mme. Mar was most beautiful at forty-five, and Mme. Recamier between the ages of thirty-five and fifty-five.

The old saw about sweet sixteen is exploded by the truer knowledge that the highest beauty does not dwell in immaturity. For, according to Science, Sittings, beauty does not mean alone the fashion of form and coloring, as found in the waxen doll. The dew of youth and a complexion of roses sometimes combine in a face that is un-moving and unresponsive as though lacking utterly the life spark. In the course of years, however, a time arrives when the coming of age must be recognized, when the muscles begin to relax, the skin to lose its polish and roundness and softness give place to angles. Contentment and good humor will still outlive all medical inventions as a preservative of youth. A woman beautiful in all else, but wanting 'mirth, will grow old, sour, thin and fallow, while the merry, fun-loving woman will be fresh and sweet, despite life's happenings and sorrows.

ITS PRODUCTS.

The salmon fisheries are the finest on the Columbia, yielding this year a revenue of thousands of dollars, which will be more than doubled in the near future.

The products of the beautiful Klickitat valley find market here, and the country south and east has this year filled the warehouses, and all available storage places to overflowing with their products.

ITS WEALTH.

It is the richest city of its size on the coast and its money is scattered over and is being used to develop more farming country than is tributary to any other city in Eastern Oregon.
