JULY JINGLINGS.

Leaves From the Notebook of Chronicle Reporters.

The Arlington National bank closed its doors yesterday.

The ferry boat is now making her landings at the mouth of Mill creek.

The Regulator brought up another consignment of cans last night. The wharf is filled with them.

The freight at the portage was all cleaned up Monday, so that shipments now come through from Portland without delay.

The Regulator did not get in last night until 10:30 o'clock, being delayed at the Locks, where she took on two carloads of freight for the O. R. & N.

The pile driver is at work replacing the trestle across Mill creek. This should be finished tomorrow. If so, the road will be open to the other side of Rowena.

The city recorder had a nice little family party of twelve before him this morning. Seven admitted being drunk, two were discharged, two had their examinations continued until this evening and the other fellow was the glass breaker.

As the chances of the Wilson bill being defeated improve the price of wool advances. One sale was made today at nine and one eighth cents, the highest price reached this season. Yesterday we understand the best price paid was eight cents.

Last night a tribe of Improved Order of Red Men was organized here, consisting of some thirty members. The institution was sadly needed here, as the present order of red men are not up to that standard where no improvement can be made.

The first through train from the east arrived this morning at 10 o'clock. The last gap to the east of us was closed last night, and though the road is not in good condition it is passable, and just as fast as men can do it, it will be put in first class shape.

F. M. Schubert is the name of the irascible German who smashed the Umatilla house windows last night. He was up before the city recorder this morning charged with being drunk and disorderly, and was given the highest penalty the recorder had on hand, thirty days in jail and fifty dollars fine.

Farrell & Co.'s table syrups are easily digested by children.

Feed wheat for sale cheap at Wasco Warehouse.

Reports from Astoria are to the effect that another big run of salmon is coming. A single drift with one net yielded 3,300 pounds for one man, while four others brought in 10,000 pounds. As it takes the fish about two weeks to reach this point from Astoria, the run will be too late to do much good here, the fishing season ending August 10th.

We print elsewhere Mr. Condon's statement that the Gypsy got through all right, and that the passengers enjoyed the trip. Incoming passengers on the Regulator brought the story here Monday night that she was tied up at 13-mile point. The presumption is that they saw the Rowena and mistook her for the Gypsy. This was quite a natural mistake, yet it shows the fallacy of jumping at conclusions.

The steward and several of the waiters, four in all, from the Dalles City concluded they would take a bath Monday in the warm springs above the lower Cascades. They took with them several demijohns for the purpose of bringing back some of the water. As the time for the boat to leave arrived, a vigorous tooting of the whistles was kept up for half an hour, but finally the boat had to pull out and leave two of them, the other two finding their way back. Yesterday morning, after spending the night in the woods, the others found their way over the ridge and down to the Regulator landing. The effects would not have been worse had the demijohns contained the pure old bug juice.

A Wild Coxeyite.

Yesterday evening about 8 o'clock, while a crowd of guests were sitting on the porch at the Umatilla house, a sawed-off square-built little fellow, evidently a German, came out of the office door with a chair in his hands and without further notice than to "get away," swung the chair around and smashed a window. The gentlemen sitting by the windows were evidently rattled, for instead of stopping the fellow they all got away while he continued the work of destruction, until one after another five of the windows had been broken. Night watchman Gibbons happened to be in the house and rushing out collared the irate little fiend, who dropped the chair, and when Ralph gave him one shake that loosened his joints and tongue he became very humble, declared himself a friend of his and wanted to shake hands. The whole thing was done so quickly that those present had not recovered from their surprise until Ralph had the fellow on the way to jail. It seems the man is, or was a Coxeyite, and has just been released from the camp in Idaho, and was given a pass over the U. P. to Portland. This, of course, did not cover the trip on the Regulator, and so last night he went into the telegraph office and asked Mr. Johnson for a pass on the boat. The latter told him he couldn't give him a pass, whereupon the Coxeyite said he would "have to stand the consequences," and at once went outside and commenced work on the windows.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, July 20, 1894.

Senator Gorman is not one of the senate conferees on the tariff bill, but he is credited by the cuckoos with being responsible for the action of the senate conferees in standing out stubbornly for the retention of the senate amendments to the tariff bill and forcing the disagreement report that has been made to the house, in the face of the influence of Mr. Cleveland and his administration, which has been openly used to bring about a surrender upon the part of the senate conferees on all of the important senate amendments, and particularly upon those putting a duty on sugar, iron and coal. Doubtless Senator Gorman is perfectly willing to accept this responsibility, but as a matter of fact he and the few democratic senators who aided him in putting a duty on iron ore and coal, thus saving two of our greatest industries from the utter destruction intended by Mr. Cleveland and the free traders, are in this matter merely the representatives of the great business and industrial interests of the country, which have plainly indicated that as a choice of two evils the tariff bill as amended by the senate is far preferable to the original Wilson bill, to which the democratic conferees of the house wish to return. As the matter looks at this writing the free traders of the house will have to choose between accepting the most important of the senate amendments and no tariff legislation at this session, and it is not yet certain which they will take. The republicans are wide awake and will take advantage of the situation if an opportunity be given them. What they wish most to do is, of course, to kill the tariff bill outright, but failing in that, they stand ready to help keep every senate amendment which puts a duty on articles made free by the Wilson bill, or raises the duty named in the Wilson bill. Things look very favorable to their succeeding in the last if they fail in the first.

The Bailey bankruptcy bill, which passed the house early this week, is not likely to be popular with creditors, as no matter how hopelessly a man's business may be involved, he cannot be compelled by creditors to take any action. He must do so voluntarily or not at all. This may be an improvement on no national bankruptcy law at all, but it is such a small improvement that it is doubtful whether the senate will ever pass the bill in its present shape.

The democratic bosses are considerably alarmed at the probable defection of a number of democratic congressmen from the South. There has been considerable talk on the subject, but it was not until this week that the revolt really showed its head. Representative Denison of Alabama, who has been in his district for a week or ten days, has written a letter formally announcing his intentions to leave the democratic party and to affiliate with the populists, and others are expected to follow suit. Republicans are not greatly interested in the revolt, as the solid south has not been allowed to play any part in their congressional calculations, although they would not object to anything that promised even remotely to bring about fairer election methods in the south, which can only come after the overthrow of the autocratic authority of the democratic party in that section.

It is easy to tell that this is congressional election year by the buncombe resolutions and bills introduced in congress solely for vote-catching purposes. To this class belongs the joint resolution offered by Senator George, of Mississippi, providing for an amendment to the constitution of the United States making eight hours constitute a legal day's work for all persons doing manual labor. How Mr. George's Mississippi planter friends, who work their "hands" from "sun up to sun down" all the year, must appreciate his alleged efforts to lighten the burden of those engaged in manual labor.

Senators Gray and Lindsay, the democratic members of the committee, that investigated the sugar trust scandal, placed themselves in very unenviable positions, when they voted against a reopening of the investigation, to ascertain the truthfulness of a statement asserting that an original order given by Senator Camden, of West Virginia, for the purchase of a block of sugar trust stock was in existence; also a photograph of that order. It but proved the charge that the democratic members of the committee had never had any desire to uncover anything reflecting upon democratic senators, although it did not prevent a reopening of the investigation. Senator Camden swore that he had never purchased any sugar stock, and if it can be proven that he did the committee should lose no time in placing the facts before the United States district attorney in order that the grand jury may find an indictment for perjury. United States senators are just as amenable to law as other men.

THE DALLES, July 25th, 1894.

EDITOR CHRONICLE:—In your issue of yesterday an item headed "A Foolish Trip," needs correction, which no doubt you will gladly give in order to keep up THE CHRONICLE's reputation for truth and veracity.

The Inland Star did get to the Cascades the 23d, and did not tie up at 13-mile point, or any where else for the night on account of the rough sea or for any other reason. The party I took down enjoyed the trip and found their train at Cascades as expected.

Yours very truly,
J. W. CONDON.
