Deafness Cannot be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

"I SPY STRANGERS."

A Cry That Will Clear the Galleries in the House of Commons.

As is well known, it is only through courtesy, and in violation of strict rules, that anyone is allowed to witness the proceedings of the English parliament. If an ill-natured member chooses to call out at any time, "I spy strangers," the galleries must be immediately cleared. This custom, of course, has become obsolete, and of late the ladies, who can go anywhere else in Westminster where visitors are allowed, through their especial champion, Mr. Byles, have endeavored to secure the same privileges relative to admission to the members' gallery as those accorded to men.

In a recent declaration before the house of parliament, says the New York Advertiser, Mr. Herbert Gladstone stated that the exclusion of ladies from this place was based on the rule enforced by successive speakers that women cannot obtain admission to the house. "In former times," he said, "between 1679 and 1773, the occasional presence of women in the gallery below the bar was permitted. Notice having, on February 2, 1778, been taken that strangers were present, the strangers, who were men, withdrew in obedience to the sergeant-at-arms. The ladies who filled the gallery exhibited such persevering reluctance to comply with the order that they interrupted the business of the house for two hours. Since that ladies have never been allowed to sit within that part of the house." Mr. Herbert Gladstone's statement has filled the English newspapers with columns of letters on the subject, the general trend of which goes to show that the British maid and matron propose to assert that they have equal rights to witness the doings of the lawmakers with their husbands and sweethearts.

GHOSTS OF THE MAORIS.

They Scratch on Walls and Make Their Presence Known by Whistling.

The Maoris, it appears, have a rooted belief in ghosts, which they called "Kehuas," and in various manifestations from the spirit world. They do not profess to hear the raps by which European spiritualists suppose that the presence of spooks is manifested, for the reason that Maori houses, being of reeds, rushes or grass, raps would not be heard; but the ghosts ingeniously accommodate themselves to circumstances by scratching instead of rapping, which is, of course, very thoughtful of them. Maoris believe that ghosts speak in shrill, whistling voices, and a recent traveler states that for that reason the Maoris hate to hear anyone whistle. The Kehua, according to native tradition, is generally found lying across a path, and to step over him is to die. If the traveler goes round by another path that leads to the place for which he is aiming he will find that the Kehua is on the new path before him. The one way to avoid disaster is to turn back and go home, or, at least, to the place last left.

A chief, described as "very intelligent," assured Mr. Tregear, who, according to the New York Advertiser, has lately been investigating Maori superstitions, that he saw the spirits of two of his uncles on each occasion before they died. His father, mother, brothers or sisters did not see, and it is not stated why he supposed that his uncles specially desired to visit him in this fashion. The explanation of this and the rest probably is that the Maoris are a remarkably superstitious and imaginative people, who can make ghosts out of nothing—or nothing more substantial than dreams—as easily as an old Scotch wife of the last century.

THEY SLEEP THROUGH SUMMER.

Animals That Lie Dormant During the Heated Term.

When the heat of a tropical or semi-tropical summer dries up every pool and parches the ground to such an extent that it is difficult for animals not endowed with great powers of locomotion to obtain water, they compromise with nature by sleeping off the season of heat and scarcity. The winter sleepers, says the Brooklyn Eagle, are pretty well known, but, owing to the summer sleepers being for the most part inhabitants of tropical countries, far removed from the path of trained observers, we are less acquainted with the species practicing that means of escaping the heat and drought of summer. Indeed, at present only one mammal, the tenec, a hedgehog-like beast of Madagascar, is known to do so. In South America and Africa various reptiles estivate. In the plains of Venezuela the alligator, the land and fresh water tortoise, the boa constrictor and several sorts of the smaller kinds of serpent lie motionless during the hottest period of the tropical summer. But their dormancy is not so perfect as that of some hibernators. In Brazil, Australia and Cape Colony lizards, frogs, tortoises and insects pass months of the rainless season incased in hard earth, and in India many species of fishes live during the hot season in a torpid condition, embedded in the hardened clay.

It Needed Trying.

Judge Shipp, of the North Carolina bench, was presiding over a trial which had been protracted till midnight, and, as a consequence, everybody was tired. The plaintiff's lawyer was addressing the jury, and suddenly said: "Gentlemen, I will tell you an anecdote." Instantly the judge, the jury and the few spectators were all attention, as the lawyer was an admirable story teller. But this time he proceeded to tell one of the dullest, proiest and most pointless jokes possible. Everybody looked disappointed. The judge, leaning over, said in an unmistakable tone of disappointment: "I don't see the point to that joke." "Neither do I," replied the witty counsel, "but your honor told it to me on our way down here, and I thought the lack of appreciation must be due to my obtuseness, I concluded to give the joke a trial by jury."

SLEEPING IN CHURCH.

It Is a Sign, for One Thing, of the Approaching Old Age.

Dr. Chalmers went to preach for Edward Irving, the erratic genius who asked the privilege of making a few preliminary remarks and spoke an hour or so in a crowded building, says the Christian Advocate. Chalmers, referring to it afterward, said: "What could I do in an exhausted receiver?" There are many cases justifying sleeping in church; the mother who has been watching two or three nights with a sick child; the father who has been thoroughly overworked, and invalids, are not to be condemned if they doze in the sanctuary unwillingly. The carbonic acid gas resulting from crowds, and especially from gas jets, old air heated by steampipes, the effects of furnaces with red hot firepots, through which not only carbonic acid gas, but a far more dangerous gas, can percolate, make the most devout and attentive drowsy.

Sometimes the first signs of old age are a tendency to sleep in church. The philosophy of the nod and of the attitudes of the head is this: Unconsciously we hold our heads in position by an effort of the will. When sleep begins that is relaxed; gravity takes charge of the head and also of the under jaw, but as the head slips back it produces an uncomfortable feeling that slightly awakens the sleeper, who spasmodically exercises his will and straightens himself up, and relaxes it immediately afterward. This may continue in some cases, putting the man in the attitude apparently of bowing assent to every succeeding sentence. No woman will voluntarily sleep in church if she has the ordinary desire to appear well. It must, however, be conceded that in many instances the minister is to blame. If he succumbs to depressing influences, and especially if he drones or is prolix, or preaches only "words, words, words," or has a canting tone, so that on whatever he says the same stress is laid at regular intervals; if he turns his face to the wall and does not look at the audience, or fixes his eye upon a point and never removes it, or is very long, or makes the same gestures frequently, he may lull the people. Some preachers have to preach half an hour or so to become interesting. It was well said to one of them: "If you had delivered the first thirty minutes of your discourse in the adjoining graveyard before entering the church, the effect upon the living would have been greater."

NAPOLEON'S DAINTY TOILET.

After His Morning Shave His Valet Scoured Him with Eau De Cologne.

One of the most interesting articles found among the recent numerous essays upon the private life of Napoleon is on the toilet of the emperor, which, it appears, was a most important matter and regulated down to the smallest details with mathematical precision. When awakened in the morning Napoleon's custom to glance over the paper while the fires were lit. He was sensitive to cold, and a fire was prepared in every room even in midsummer. Then of distinguished people awaiting an audience he would designate those whom he wished to see, after which he would rise and take a hot bath, lasting about an hour. The daily shaving was the next duty. Ordinarily his physician, Corvisart, would be present, chatting and securing favors for his friends. Napoleon's greeting was usually some badinage, such as: "Ah, charlatan! How many patients have you killed this morning?" And the physician would reply in kind. Two valets were necessary for shaving; one holding the basin and another the mirror. The emperor, in a flannel robe, de chamber, then covered his face with soap and began to shave. Throwing off his robe, Napoleon was next deluged with eau de cologne and subjected to a thorough scrubbing with a rough brush. The valet then rubbed the whole body with linen rolls saturated with eau de cologne—a custom that Napoleon had acquired in the east. The scrubbing was none of the lightest, either, for he would call out from time to time: "Harder—rub harder." When the scrubbing was over the emperor dressed himself. A curious detail of his custom was the religious care with which he kept hung around his neck the little leather envelope, shaped like a heart, which contained the poison that was to liberate him in case of irretrievable reverses of fortune. This poison was prepared after a recipe that Cabanis had given to Corvisart, and after the year 1808 the emperor never undertook a campaign without having his little packet of poison.

Origin of the Word Hibernian.

It was formerly a custom among Teutonic nations to drink a liquor made of honey, and called hydromel, for a moving age (a month) after the wedding feast. Hence the name "honey-moon." The Teutons knew very little about treacle, as we learn that the name Teutoni was given, 230 B. C., to a race of people who had long been settled in the country, and in the provinces which are now known respectively as Denmark and Schleswig-Holstein, but which were then known collectively as the Chersonesus Cimbrica. The Teutons may even have brought the custom to England with them when they came over the Kimmerian Bosphorus about 680 B. C.

Japanese Soldiers.

A British officer, who apparently knows, says that it "would be as reasonable to charge brave men armed with pitchforks against brave men armed with rifles as to pit, man for man, the Chinese in their present condition against the Japanese. Of all native and colonial troops I have seen, and I have seen most of them," says he, "I would, next to Goorkhas, prefer a regiment of Japanese. They are brave, temperate, patient and energetic, and at this moment the Chinese, whatever might be done with them, are two hundred years behind." There is a gymnasium in every Japanese barracks.
