

SIX POINTS

out of many, where Dr. Pierce's Pellets are better than other pills: 1. They're the smallest, and easiest to take—little, sugar-coated granules that every child takes readily. 2. They're perfectly easy in their action—no griping, no disturbance. 3. Their effects last. There's no reaction afterwards. They regulate or cleanse the system according to size of dose. 4. They're the cheapest, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned. You pay only for the good you get. 5. Put up in glass—are always fresh. 6. They cure Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, Sick or Bilious Headaches, and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels.

It cures Catarrh in the Head—perfectly and permanently—Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

"Did you tell the new girl of our custom, my dear, of deducting the amount of breakage from her wages at the end of the month?" "Yes, I did." "And what did she say?" "She didn't say anything. She broke six glasses, five plates and the soup tureen, packed her valise and skipped."—Harper's Bazaar.

Deafness Cannot be Cured By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free. F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O. A Leader. Since its first introduction, electric bitters has gained rapidly in popular favor, until now it is clearly in the lead among pure medicinal tonics and alteratives—containing nothing which permits its use as a beverage or intoxicant, it is recognized as the best and purest medicine for all ailments of stomach, liver or kidneys. It will cure sick headache, indigestion, constipation, drive malarial from the system. Satisfaction guaranteed with each bottle or the money will be refunded. Price only 50c. per bottle. Sold by Snipes & Kinersly. "Conductor," said the weary commuter, "I wish you would open this window for me." "Oh, you do, do you?" retorted the conductor. "Do you take me for Sandow?"—Harper's Bazar.

While in Chicago, Mr. Charles L. Kahler, a prominent shoe merchant of Des Moines, Iowa, had quite a serious time of it. He took such a severe cold that he could hardly talk or navigate, but the prompt use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured him so quickly that others at the hotel who had had colds followed his example and half a dozen persons ordered it from the nearest drug store. They were profuse in their thanks to Mr. Kahler for telling them how to cure a bad cold so quickly. For sale by Blakeley & Houghton Druggists.

"Do you really mean that you like Blinks' last book?" "Yes; I enjoyed it more than any of the others." "How could you?" "I didn't read it."—Chicago Interior Ocean.

HABITS OF SOME PRESIDENTS.

Of Recent Years None Save Arthur Paid Attention to Society. Gen. Grant brought the camp into the white house, says Harper's Magazine. Mr. Hayes had lived at Washington as a representative at a hotel or a boarding-house. Gen. Garfield had settled in the capital in a house of his own, and had enjoyed the kind of social life that may be had anywhere in this country and that runs to literary clubs that are formed to facilitate the escape of unpublished manuscripts. To encourage talent and literary ambition was a great pleasure of the president, whose murder cut short the term that would have been marked with more geniality and agreeable talk than is usual at the white house. Mr. Arthur brought city manners and customs with him. People who did not know him were greatly mistaken in him. There had been a good deal of refinement and elegance in Mr. Arthur's home, and its influence made the white house more of a social center than it had been before or than it has been since. Then came Mr. Harrison who had passed six years in the senate and a Washington boarding-house, and Mr. Cleveland, who went to the capital a bachelor, having lived most of his life in apartments in a Buffalo business block.

None of these men adopted the manners and customs of court life, with the exception of Mr. Arthur, who insisted that those with whom he came in contact should pay his office a respect something more than the formal decent respect of good manners. The rest knew nothing of the rules which Washington society had laid down for its own and their guidance, and which were as conflicting as the various interests that invented and frequently modified them. Moreover, they have seemed to care a good deal less. They or their wives or their secretaries studied up the necessary regulations that govern the intercourse between the head of the nation and the diplomatic representatives of foreign powers. And, although Mr. Jefferson insisted on talking out to dinner what woman he would, regardless of her husband's rank, modern presidents have done their best to observe the proprieties in this respect.

THE CARDINAL'S CLOSE CALL.

His Keen Sense of Smell Once Saved Him From Being Poisoned. Years have rolled by since, but the story of an almost fatal accident to Cardinal Gibbons has lost none of its interest through not having been previously told, says the Philadelphia Call. Just before he rose to give the impassioned reading of his poem, "King Lear," at the anniversary dinner of the Sons of St. George, Prof. H. H. Hay, of Girard college, told of the happening as it had been related to him while he was traveling in Europe by a priest acquainted with the circumstances. "While the cardinal, who was then an archbishop," said Prof. Hay, "was traveling across the Atlantic some years ago he complained one afternoon that he wasn't feeling very well, but was told by the ship's surgeon to await medical treatment until the following day, when something would be done for him if his sickness continued. On the day following the steward of the steamer was duly sent with a remedy for the eminent prelate. As he was about to place the glass containing the draught to his lips the archbishop was almost overcome by a strange and pungent odor. He hesitated a moment and lowered the vessel containing the liquid until he recovered from the effect of the smell. Glancing incidentally at the bottle in the steward's hand he noticed the word 'poison' on a label, and, not without a little alarm, asked the man if he knew what he was offering. The steward replied that he had done as was directed by the doctor. Alarmed, the archbishop sent post haste to the medical man to make sure of what was being tendered him. This time it was the surgeon who had occasion to manifest surprise. He hurried to his distinguished patient's side and informed the archbishop that the glass offered him contained enough deadly poison to kill any two men."

PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

Illinois Comes Third with Forty-Two Great Book Collections. Massachusetts is far and away ahead of all other states in the supply of reading for the people, says the Troy (N. Y.) Times. Its 212 free public libraries have a total of 2,760,000 volumes, and this gives 1,233 volumes for each 1,000 of the population. The nearest rival to Massachusetts is New Hampshire, with forty-two libraries containing 175,000 volumes, being 464 books per 1,000 of the people. Third in rank is the great state of Illinois, with forty-two libraries, the same in number as the little state of the White mountains, but it has only 130 volumes to each 1,000 people. The next four in their order are Michigan, Rhode Island, New York and Indiana. This places our state sixth in rank, while it holds first place in population, wealth and educational opportunities.

The millionaire gives to public libraries have been few up to date. According to Mr. Fletcher's book they do not number more than seven. They are: Chicago, John Crerar, $3,000,000; W. N. Newberry, $2,000,000; New York, the Astors, $2,000,000; Baltimore, George Peabody, $1,400,000; Enoch Pratt, $1,225,000; Philadelphia, Dr. James Rush, $1,500,000; Pittsburgh, Andrew Carnegie, $1,000,000. Look over this list and compare it with the scores of philanthropists who have given their millions to found colleges, universities and even special schools, and it looks infinitesimally small. The rich men have not yet in large numbers risen to a true appreciation of the value to society and to civil affairs of these colleges of the people. We have more colleges and universities than can be supported without frequent endowments, scholarships and other gifts. But the library once established and endowed sustains itself, and is never lacking in patronage.

MOURNING FOR SNAKES.

New England Reptiles Must Be Taking Their Vacation. Whenever you say: "This is a splendid season" to the Boston Journal's snake editor, he shakes his head sorrowfully and remarks: "Not a bit of it. It's the worst season on record." "Why, didn't you see the other day that rattlesnakes had appeared at Exeter, N. H.?" he was asked by an inquirer. "What of that?" was the reply. "Would you consider that that was worth being compared with the story from the west—about the man who went down into an abandoned mine and killed one hundred and thirty-three rattlesnakes, drank a quart of whisky and earned one hundred dollars in less than an hour?" And the snake editor's eyes fairly glistened at the thought of the adventure. "Don't you remember the eight-foot snake found out at the Back Bay?" "What is an eight-foot snake in Boston to be compared with the big serpent stories coming from other parts of the country. There was the boa constrictor who escaped from a cage and hid in a sewer." "Oh, that was old." "No; that happened in Washington, and is vouched for. Then there was the duel between two jealous boa constrictors in a Brazilian forest, and the two different stories about men barely escaping being swallowed by pythons, and the educated black snake which milked a cow, and the man who caught eight ground hogs and was attacked by black snakes and had to throw the animals away to appease the reptiles." This was a long sentence and the snake editor had to pause for breath, but before the questioner could get in a query, he resumed the catalogue. "Then there was the reappearance of the sea serpent in the Pacific ocean, and the man who eats rattlesnakes in preference to spring chickens, and the snake charmer who was being photographed with his pets, when they went on a strike and demolished the establishment. I had almost forgotten the two cases of people on the California coast who were seized by—shall I say octopuses or octopi?—and almost killed. No, this has been a splendid season for snake stories in every section of the country but New England, and it is enough to drive an enterprising snake editor west, where there is something to do. New England isn't in it." And with that the disheartened snake editor mournfully wended his way toward a place where he could go in training for seeing snakes as much as he liked.

SIGNING THE DECLARATION.

Files Pestered the Fathers of the Republic as They Created It. Jefferson was fond of telling a story which illustrates in a forcible manner the importance that absurdly insignificant matters may sometimes assume, says the Philadelphia Press. When the deliberative body that gave the world the declaration of independence was in session its proceedings were conducted in a hall close to which was situated a livery stable. The weather was warm, and from the stable came swarms of flies that lighted on the legs of the honorable members and, biting through the thin silk stockings then in fashion, gave infinite annoyance. It was no uncommon sight, said Jefferson, to see a member making a speech with a large handkerchief in hand and pausing at every moment to thrash the flies from his thinly-protected calves. The opinion of the body was not unanimous in favor of the document, and under other circumstances discussion might have been protracted for days, if not weeks, but the flies were intolerable. Efforts were made to find another hall, free from the pests, but in vain. As the weather became warmer the flies grew worse, and the flapping of handkerchiefs was heard all over the hall as an accompaniment to the voices of the speakers. In despair at last some one suggested that matters be hurried so that the body might adjourn and get away from the flies. There were a few mild protests, but no one heeded them, the immortal declaration was hurriedly copied and, with handkerchiefs in hand fighting flies as they came, the members hastened to the table to sign the authentic copy and leave the flies in the lurch. Had it not been for the livery stable and its inmates there is no telling when the document would have been completed, but it certainly would not have been signed on the Fourth.

LONG-LIVED RUSSIANS.

Some of Them Reach the Age of Six Score and Five. It has long been a well-established fact that abnormal longevity is more common among the Russians than among any other of the European nations, says the London News. From an official report collated from well-authenticated local registers, it now appears that the government of Kioff takes the first place of all Russian provinces in this respect. During last year, it is officially stated, there were fourteen centenarian deaths registered in that government. In the city of Kioff one man died aged 110 years, while within the suburban circle two women died aged respectively 102 and 104 years. In Berditcheff two men reached the respective ages of 101 and 114 years. In Vassilkoff another patriarch died in his 115th year. In the same district there died a Jewess aged 105; in Sverigorodka, a man of 110 years; in Tarastsha, another of 105; in Uman, two men aged respectively 106 and 102 years; in Radomytzel, a Jew aged 107 and a Christian aged 103; and lastly, a man of 105 years died at Tcherkassy. Here are fourteen persons, dying within the same year and within the limits of one district, whose united ages amount to 1,489 years. According to the Saratoff journals there is still living in that government an ancient veteran of the First Napoleon army, formerly Lieut. Savin, and since 1812 known as Nicolai Alexandrovitch Savin, who has celebrated 126 birthdays.
