"You horrid, mean, detestable old thing," said a young woman in brown stepping up behind a young woman in blue, who was enjoying a solitary ice cream soda at a drug store counter. "You're a perfect pig." The young woman in blue turned an astonished face toward the speaker, and the speaker was covered with confusion and blushes. "Oh!" she exclaimed, "Beg your pardon! I thought you were a friend of mine." To which the young woman in blue replied amiably: "Of course, I knew you did from the way you spoke!"—Boston Post.

"Some men," said Uncle Eben, "is so soured on human nature dat when er frien' returns a borrowed umbrell dey t'inks it am a reflection on he umbrell's quality."—Washington Star.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure in the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O. Sold by Druggists, 75c.

Boy (who has lost his way)—I say, miser, how far is it to Campton Creek? Man (stupidly)—Find out. I ain't no city directory. "No, you ain't; you're a volume of good manners, you are!"

Specimen Cases.
 S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with neuralgia and rheumatism, his stomach was disordered, his liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O., had five large fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him entirely. Sold by Snipes & Kinersly.

Fond parent—Goodness, how you look, child! You are soaked. Frankie—Please, pa, I fell into the canal. "What, with your new trousers on?"

Now Try This.
 It will cost you nothing and will surely do you good, if you have a cough, cold, or any trouble with throat, chest or lungs. NAPOLEON AS A NOVELIST.

Discovery of a Work of Fiction Written by Bonaparte in His Youth.

Napoleon, when about to enter on his adventurous career, committed to his uncle, Cardinal Fesch, a box of MSS. containing papers written from his sixteenth to his twenty-fourth year. After the cardinal's death these papers fell into various hands. In 1847 Lord Ashburnham bought them for the exorbitant price of forty thousand dollars. They now belong to the royal library of Florence, and will soon appear in book form under the auspices of Mr. Frederick Masson. The story was written at Auxonne, its author, a lieutenant of cavalry, being then in the garrison of that place, and nineteen years of age.

As a youth Napoleon Bonaparte adored England, the prime author of his future downfall, and detested France, whose idol and supreme ruler he was yet to be. These prejudices came out prominently in the story, which is of the blood-and-thunder sort, and which, written by a hand less famous, would be dismissed as the very crude production of a youth whose imagination reveled in scenes of carnage and horror.

A grim old Sicilian warrior, who has fled from civilization and with his daughter inhabits a steep, barren rock in the Mediterranean known as the Island of Garzona, tells the story. He had led a revolt against the hated French lasting eight years. At its close forty of his one hundred soldiers had been executed, his parents, wife and seven sons cruelly murdered before his eyes, and his daughter carried off as prisoner. In dying his father had made him swear eternal hatred and vengeance against the French.

He was not allowed to remain unmolested on his rocky island. One day seven Turks landed there with three prisoners, one of whom they killed. One of the two others, who were set at liberty, proved to be the long lost daughter. The third, a Frenchman, the old man drove from him, bidding him hide in a cave from the light of day and show his presence under penalty of death. For protection the daughter donned male attire.

Frenchmen kept landing at the island, and were pretty sure to be murdered by the father and his daughter. One time, when two French vessels were wrecked off the rocks and the crews swam ashore, this lovely pair killed them all. At another time, when a French ship was near foundering, the old man, moved by the lamentable cries of the poor wretches, spared their lives to his lasting regret. Here he parenthetically remarks that he is a man, and that "before one grows hard and bad enough to be a king or minister he must have stifled all the feelings that belong to human nature."

These French monsters proved ungrateful and put on the airs of masters. When they returned to their ship our hero, who had previously plunged his stiletto into the hearts of two of them, arming himself with a brace of stiletos and four pistols, boarded the ship and slew every living soul on board. Then the father and daughter took possession of the ship's furniture and treasures and dragged the bodies of the victims to their home altar, where the fumes of their burning flesh rose in "a novel incense which seemed to please the Deity."

THE GUN KICKED.

And the African Thought It Was a Little Too Strong for Him.

When Mr. Montague, the English traveler, was in Africa, he gave to a native an old single-barreled gun, and the fellow was delighted, says Golden Days. He put in a small handful of powder, and about a quarter of a newspaper on top of it, and finally a ball, and then rammed the whole charge down. Then he departed. In the evening he returned, with his face battered and swollen almost beyond recognition.

"What have you been doing?" asked the Englishman, in amazement. The native sat down on the ground and said, sorrowfully:

"A little after noon I found the track of the elands, and I followed it until I found them feeding. I crept up to one of them. He was twenty yards away. I rested the barrel of the gun on a stone, placed the butt against my nose, directed the muzzle toward the eland and pulled the trigger. I do not know what happened, for I was blind and deaf for some time, but when I came to I found myself lying at the bottom of the gully. The gun was beside me, my face was as you now see it, and the elands had gone away. Son of a white man, it was very kind of you to give me a gun, but it is too good a gun for me—too strong, too powerful. It needs the wisdom of white man to rule it. Take it back. Farewell!"

Dog Population of Paris.

Paris has eighty thousand registered dogs, says the Eleveur, which means that there is one licensed dog to every twenty-eight inhabitants. Granting that there are as many unlicensed dogs as there are licensed ones, the canine population of Paris is a very large one indeed. The largest number of dogs is found in the poorest quarters. The estimated cost of feeding the eighty thousand dogs is two million dollars per annum, and they in turn afford a living to twenty-five manufacturers of dog collars and muzzles, four bakers of dog's bread, five factories where dog biscuits, consisting of meat fiber, are made, three special dog pharmacies, a dozen infirmaries and two hospitals.

Giants of Prehistoric France.

In a prehistoric cemetery recently uncovered at Montpellier, France, while workmen were excavating a water works reservoir, human skulls were found measuring twenty-eight, thirty-one and thirty-two inches in circumference. The bones which were found with the skulls were also of gigantic proportions. These relics were sent to the Paris academy, and a learned "savant," who lectured on the find, says that they belonged to a race of men between ten and fifteen feet in height.
