The Epworth League of the M. E. church will give an entertainment during fair week, consisting of tableaux, vocal and instrumental music, and a scarf drill.

After the high winds of yesterday, followed by frosts, it is quite probable the weather will settle and the delightful Indian summer will prance along in the procession.

The East End is crowded with wheat teams, and some complaint is made that the mill discriminates against wheat raised on this side of the river, and in favor of Klickitat wheat.

The only criminal case tried in Sherman county, at the term of court just closed, was that of Anderson Morris who was charged with an assault with a dangerous weapon. Morris and Jacob Brock had a dispute in the harvest field about two months ago, when Morris struck Brock in the eye with a pocket knife. He was found guilty and sentenced to one year in the penitentiary.

The following officers were elected by the Oregon Press Association at Pendleton on Wednesday evening: President, J. R. Beegle, of the St. Helens; first vice-president, C. C. Dougherty, of the Dallas Observer; second vice-president, F. G. Homeless, But Cheerful.

A forlorn little orphan colt, friendless but friendly, is a sort of privileged character about the city. Recently it wandered down to the engine house, and taking up a position by the side of the tongue of the fire engine, stood there asleep for several hours, unaware of the interest it was awaking in passers by. Last night a charitably-inclined gentleman found it asleep on the sidewalk near the burned Vogt building, and as it followed him down town he procured some hay and housed the demure little fellow in the marshal's office. When the nightwatchmen came that way they took pity on its loneliness and turned it over to the party of the first part, the aforesaid charitably-inclined gentleman the initials of whose name is George Brown. The colt put in a comfortable night alongside the fire engine, and this morning, well this morning it is house-cleaning day at the marshal's office and the engine house.

At a business meeting of the Epworth League last evening, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: E. J. Collins, president; Mrs. M. Fowler, 1st vice president; Mrs. M. J. Randall, assistant organist; John Parrott, chorister.

Mr. T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers, st., New York City, says that Ayer's Sarsaparilla cured him of a dry and scaly humor, from which he had suffered intolerably. He adds: "I have not now a blemish on my body, and my cure is wholly due to Ayer's Sarsaparilla."

Death of Hon. J. H. Mosier.

At Mosier, Friday afternoon Oct. 5th, 1894, at 1:15 Jonah Harrison Mosier, aged 73 years 6 months and 25 days.

Funeral in Mosier cemetery Monday morning at 10 o'clock under the direction of the Masonic Fraternity.

Jonah Harrison Mosier was born in Maryland March 10th, 1821, and was therefore 73 years old. While yet an infant his family emigrated to Pennsylvania and successively afterward to Iowa and Wisconsin. In the latter named state, at Smithville, he was married in 1846 to Jane Rollins. In 1849 he moved to California, and being a carpenter by trade built several houses both in San Francisco and the state capital. As an instance of those stirring times it is related that he frequently received $25 as the price of a single day's work. The early days of his life in the Occident was not without adventure, also. While camping on the Gila river himself and party, including Major Stein and Lieut. Forsyth, were attacked by Apaches—those hardiest, most bloodthirsty and most tenaciously warlike of Indians. In the encounter Lieut. Forsyth was killed and Major Stein wounded. Later he left California for his former home in Missouri, but like all others who have had a taste of western life, he soon tired of his old surroundings, and in 1853 bade farewell forever to Missouri, removing directly to The Dalles, Oregon. He, with Col. Gates and Judge Laughlin (father of Frank J. Laughlin) first platted the city of The Dalles. Soon thereafter Mr. Mosier was again busy with his hammer and saw and built the first business houses of the city. In the spring of 1855 he settled at Mosier, where he has resided ever since. His pursuits since then were varied. In 1855 he erected a sawmill, which is believed to have been the first operated in Wasco county. He also drove cattle to the mines, and himself owned large bands. He had an occasional brush with Indians, and on one occasion nearly met his death while rowing a large sail boat up the river during a comparative calm. An Indian concealed in some brush shot at him, the bullet, an irregular metal slug passing through the space occupied by his person an instant before, the backward movement of his body while rowing saving his life. A companion, with more discretion, if less valor, quickly laid down in the bottom of the boat, leaving the rower to gain a safer distance alone. More than once Mr. Mosier, with his family, has been compelled to temporarily abandon his place in the night, being threatened by predatory Indians. But though courageous and resolute, he never retaliated in kind, depending more upon kindness and inoffensive conduct toward his copper-hued brethren than the modern weapons of offense and defense. In 1876 Mr. Mosier served the state with dignity and honor in the legislature.

His wife died in 1865, after bearing seven children, respectively, Mrs. Sarah Alice Faucette of Walls Walla, Mrs. Emily Ann Mansfield (deceased) of Weston, Mrs. Mary Susan Adams of Hood River, Mrs. Josephine Elizabeth Willoughby (deceased) of Harriburg, Oregon, Benjamin Franklin Mosier (deceased), Jefferson Newton Mosier and Miss Lydia Sophia Mosier of Walla Walla. In 1866 he married Mrs. Martha J. Lewis. Two children were the fruits of the latter marriage, Mrs. Effie J. Phillips of Mosier and Miss Dollie Mosier.

Mr. Mosier has been quite ill since the latter part of June, but really his sickness dates back to a much earlier time. During the first year of the plague known as la grippe, he was stricken with the disease, and has never been the same since. Naturally of a sunny disposition, mild tempered, extremely hospitable, and generous to a fault, disease falsely clothed him with less apparent heartiness and joviality of manner. His merry laugh, which made the woods ring and was in itself a cure for dyspepsia, was ever afterward hushed, and his naturally buoyant spirits changed, with accumulating years, to sterner moods. The heroic comrade, the generous neighbor, the jolly companion and sacrificing friend had all suffered loss at a stroke, and though kindness, hospitality and generosity were still his dominating traits of character, those knew him best who knew him before disease laid its unkindly hand upon him. But this only by comparison. In the community in which he was a patriarch, where he has braved the perils and endured the privations and toils of pioneer life, a neighborhood where he antedates the first other civilized inhabitant yet living by a score of years, he is respected and revered as is given to but few to be, and his memory will be perpetuated long years after his kindly spirit has bidden adieu to its earthly tenement. The creek he settled and the town he located justly bear the name of its locally illustrious founder, all now given to history and memory in minds of men. He professed religion a short time before his death, and sustained by its consolations and an indomitable will, he bore his sufferings uncomplainingly to the end.
