Facial Peculiarities Which Come Through Habit.

Distinctive Types That Are Found in Certain Callings—The Queer Ef-fects of Occupation One's Upon the Features.

The incessant flow of involuntary nerve currents to the facial muscle doubtless accounts for the odd similarity of expression among men of the same vocation. In many such cases, says Blackwood's Magazine, the conditions are so complex that it seems impossible to lay one's finger upon the special items of environment which conduce to the facial characteristics exhibited by nearly all members of certain trades and professions. What, for instance, is there about the process of making shoes which evokes the unmistakable cobbler's visage? The por-trait of Edward, the Banff naturalist, in Mr. Smiles' book, shows the type in a marked degree. As far as my observation carries me, the cause must be looked for in the last, lapstone and waxend of old-fashioned cordwainery since men who work the machines in modern shoe factories, or who do ordinary repairing, do not exhibit the expression. It appears probable that the tailor's distinctive type of face may have been partially created by his habit of working his jaws concomitantly with his shears. Let anyone watch a person cutting a piece of tough material with seissors, and he will see that the lower part of the face wags in rhythmic and spontaneous unicon wit! the blades. Shepherds and farm laborers who join sheep-shearing gangs ecrtainly acquire a different expression while engaged in this kind of work

The cast of countenance by which one so easily recognizes a groom is pertially explicable from the fact that the muscles which close the jaws and compress the lips are always called into play when we are asserting our will over that of a horse. Nearly all jockeys and horsemen have a pecutiar set of the mouth and chin, but I have been unable to distinguish any special characteristic about the eye or upper part of the face. It is instructive to compare the visage of the ruler of horses with that of the ruler of men. The horseman's face shows command in the mouth, the drill sergeant's in the mouth and the eye. The last is undoubtedly the most effective instrument in exacting obedience from our own species. Here we get a hint of that cause of want of dignity, that ele-ment of coarseness, which is discernable in the countenances of some men and women who have much to do with horses. The higher and nobler method of expressing authority is outweighed by the lower and more animal one. Generally speaking, it is a strenuous contest with minor difficulties which produce a thin and rigid set of lips. It is seen almost invariably in housewives of the Martha type, who are "careful and troubled about many things," and whose souls are shaken to the center by petty worries within doors, and the lode in the Tamarack mine. Shaft No. strife a outrance with shortcomings of the scullery maid or the cook.

The compressed lip so loved and so often misinterpreted by novelists is a sign of weakness rather than strength. It tells of perpetual conflicts in which The strong will is not agitated into strenuous action by the small worries of the hour, and the great occasions which call for its whole forces are too few to produce a permanent impress of this kind upon the features. The the reserves are called into the fray. this kind upon the features. commanding officer, assured of his lower. A separate cage is always used men's obedience, does not habitually keep his lip muscles in a state of tension. Look at the sea captain, the most absolute monarch on the earth. He carries authority and power in his face, but it resides in his eye and the confident assurance of his easily set mouth. Every spar and shaft and muscle in his floating realm must obey him, and he knows it. This is probably a reason why the sea captain and the engine drivers show a certain simi-larity of type. The engine driver can make his captive giant, strong as ten thousand men, obey the pressure of his finger. His lips are usually calm, like those of the statues of the wielder of thunderbolts on Olympus. Who ever saw a man commanding a man-of-war or driving a locomotive with the contentious lip of the school usher? The typical expressions of the members of those three liberal professions which

Sir Thomas Browne says are afl founded upon the fall of Adam are well enough recognized to have been long the prey of the caricaturist. The several distinctive traits of each, and the possible causes which give rise to them, are too complex to be dealt with in a single article. Speaking very generally, the cleric's face is indicative of authority of the thin-lipped kind, and of a dignified sense of the canetity of his office. The doctor's jaw and mouth are less rigid, yet tell of decision. His eye is vigilant and sympathetic, and his whole facial aspect conveys the idea confidential, with a pouncing alertness of the eye, and a prevailing expression of weighty perspicacity.

To the lovers of strange goods the bazars of Damascus are far more alluring than those of Cairo or of Constantinople; the capacious chests of the merchants contain much that we would buy were our purses longer. Old embroideries of wonderful color, delicate china, silks of many hues, swords of cunning workmanship, all these lie piled beside us on the floor. It is but seldom that a really good specimen of the Damascus sword can be obtained, for the art of working and engraving steel is dead. These swords were made of alternate layers of iron and steel. so finely tempered that the blade would bend to the hilt without breaking, with an edge so keen that no coat of mail could resist, and a surface so highly polished that when a Moslem wished to rearrange his turban he used his sword for a looking-glasss. MUSIC ON THE BENCH.

A Fiji Judge Who Twanged a Jews-Harp While Hearing Cases. The natives of Fiji are amenable to a criminal code known as the native regulations. These are administered by two courts, the district court, which sits monthly and is presided over by a native magistrate; and the provincial court, which assembles every three months before the English and native magistrates sitting together. In "South Sea Yarns," Basil Thomson gives an amusing account of the district court:

The courthouse, a native building carpeted with mats, is now packed with natives, sitting cross-legged, only a small place being reserved in front of the table for the accused and the witnesses. The magistrate takes his seat, and his scribe, sitting on the floor at his side, prepares his writing materials to record the sentences.

The dignity with which the judge adjusts his shirt collar and clears his throat is a little marred when he produces from his bosom a jew's-harp with which to beguile the tedium of the

The first case is called. Samuela and Timothe, two meek-faced youths of cighteen and nineteen, sitting tallorhashion before the table, are charged with fowl stealing. They plead: "Not Guilty," and the owner of the fowls, being sworn, deposes that having been awakened at night by the voice of a favorite hen in angry remonstrance, he ran out of his house, and after a hot chase captured the accused red-handed in two senses, for they were plucking his hen while it was still alive.

Quite unmoved by this tragic tale, Vatureba seems to listen only to the melancholy notes of his jew's-harp; but the witness is a chief and a man of influence withal, and a period of awed silence follows his accusation, broken only by a subdued twanging from the The judge has not yet opened his lips during the case, and as the jew's-harp is not capable of much expression, it is with some interest that we await the sentence.

Suddenly the music ceases, the instrument is withdrawn from the mouth, the oracle is about to speak. Alas! he utters but two words: "Vula tolu" (three months), and there peals out a malignantly triumphant strain from the jew's-harp. But the prosecutor starts up with a protest. One of the accused is his nephew, he explains, and he only wished a light sentence to be imposed. Three months for one fowl is so severe; esides, if the boy has three months, he must go to the central jail and not work out his sentence in his own dis-

Again there is silence, and the voice of the jew's-harp has changed from triumph to thoughtful melancholy. At length it ceases, and the oracle speaks again: "Bogi tolu" (Three days).

NEARLY A MILE IN DEPTH.

The Deepest Mining Shaft in the World Is Sald to Be in Michigan.

A few weeks ago the deepest mining shaft in the world reached the copper 3, which is now a trifle over 4,200 feet in depth, was begun three years ago, and reached the vein on August 4 at the depth of 4,185 feet.

A trip down three-quarters of a mile into the bowels of the earth is a denear the shaft, the signal is given to for carrying men, and the rate of speed is less than where rock is hoisted or timber lowered in the other compartments. The trip requires five minutes, and as the cage sinks at the rate of speed equal to that of the swiftest elevator in a modern sky-scraper, the dark walls of rock, on which a faint light is thrown by the candles and oil-lamps of the party, seem to be swiftly shooting upward, while the cage is standing

At last the bottom is reached. A dozen miners, covered with grime and dust, are busily at work. Power drills, fed by compressed air coming almost a mile through iron pipes, are tapping the rock petulantly. Men are shoveling the rock blasted from the lode into the cars, which are trundled into the cages and hoisted to the surface. The candles throw weird shadows, and as the reflection comes to the mind of the mortal from earth's surface that he is deeper down under the earth's crust than man has ever penetrated before, the desire to ascend to fresh air and sunshine is apt to come uppermost.

A few minutes show all that is to be seen, for No. 3 shaft has just reached the lode and the extensive system of drifts, crosscuts, and winzes existing in other shafts of the mine has been but begun down here. The work is all planned for many years to come, and the force of compressed air and the muscle of man will transfer those plans from the paper where they were placed by the busy brain of the engineer into openings in the living rock, inch by inch, but with the same power of never-ceasing persistence which causes the falling drop of water in the course of long ages to wear away the stone.

Rice Paper.

Most people have an idea that rice paper, out of which eigarettes are made, is made of rice-ninety-nine out of every one hundred smokers share this opinion. Rice does not enter into the composition at all, and the name is a misnomer. The so-called rice paper is made from the pitch of a small tree which is indigenous to Formosa. It is found nowhere else, I believe. It besented in this country by the sarsapa rilla. The pith is pure white. The stems are sent to China, where the paper is made. It is used largely by the Chinese artists for water-color drawings. Those illustrated Chinese and Japanese books are made of it The Chinese and Japs also dye the paper and make crifficial flowers of it.
