BRIEF MENTION.

Leaves From the Notebook of Chronicle Reporters.

Andrew Kellar has a four-room cottage to rent

A land slide down the river delayed the local passenger a short time today.

Tom Gilmore was over from Klickitat this morning and says he will finish his fall plowing tomorrow, and quit for the year.

This has been a perfect winter day, lacking only a little snow. The sun shone brightly all day and was warm enough to just thaw the top of the ground and nothing more.

In noting the death of Joseph W. Reedy yesterday, we stated that he was president of the American Railway Union. This we are informed by his brother engineers is a mistake.

Arrangements have been made for shipping the body of Engineer Reedy to his old home, in Bethel, Pennsylvania. Engineer Thomas Haslam will accompany the remains, starting tonight.

Blakeley & Houghton have purchased the stock of the Helm drugstore and are taking an inventory today. The goods will be removed at once to give the brick masons and carpenters a chance to take out the lower partitions of the building.

You may not think so, but you want to go around to Crossen's grocery and see the processes by which things good to eat are made without the use of the ancient and everlasting hog grease. Cottolene is the new fad, and if it is as good as it looks, it will soon win its way to popular favor.

Another train wreck occurred at Tumwater, near Celilo, last night about 11 o'clock. This time the accident was caused by a broken wheel, or something of that kind. Several cars left the track and were pretty badly wrecked. It is said that the sections of one of the gates at the Cascade Locks was on the train, but are now under the wrecked cars, and are probably pretty badly damaged. If this is the fact another delay will perhaps be caused in completing that very much postponed piece of work.

Yesterday was "squawker day," every youngster in town having from one to a dozen of those ear-disturbing rubber nuisances, and not one of them seemed to grow weary of tooting the measly things. One redeeming feature about them, however, is their similarity to the national banks they go "bust" pretty easily. In spite of much blowing and continuous bursting there is yet quite a sufficiency of them, but they will pass away.

The Ready Inquest.

The testimony before the coroner's jury yesterday is too voluminous to print. In substance it is that Reedy's train was on the side-track, that the switch had been left open necessarily to allow Reedy to back his train. The principal point to be decided was as to who was to blame for the accident, and under the rules of the company the blame seems to fall on the brakeman and conductor of the freight, and partly on Reedy himself. We say partly, because we know nothing of those rules, but this is the inference given by the witnesses. There is no question as to the flagman being sent out, and none as to his flagging the passenger twice, getting an answer each time. The fact that Engineer Sherman did not put on the air brakes is explained by the fact that the flagman instead of stopping at his post ran on towards his train as soon as his signal was answered. From this fact Sherman supposed the track was clear as far as the other end of the switch.

Whoever of the trainmen may be to blame we do not pretend to say; but we do say that the primary cause of the accident lies with the company and the board of railroad commissioners. The company should not send out trains longer than the sidings, and the board of railroad commissioners should not allow it to do so, and for this reason the blame lies more with them than with the trainmen, or any of them. The verdict of the coroner's jury is as follows:

"We the jury called and sworn to inquire into the death of Joseph W. Reedy, find, First, that he was employed as an engineer on the Oregon Railway and Navigation Co's railroad, that at about 3:35 o'clock a. m., December 25th, A. D., 1894, at what is known as the Summit, on the line of the said railroad in Wasco county, Oregon, a head-end collision occurred between train No. 1 and extra engine 386, and then and there the said Joseph W. Reedy was killed by reason of said collision. Second, we also find that the cause of the collision was through the non-observance of rules No. 86 and 99 of Employees Time Table, No. 62 of said railroad by the employes of extra train engine No. 386.

Amusement in Mitchell.

As I sit at my window this 23d of Dec., I shiver and cringe, for just below there seems to be a heavy snowstorm and its dismal and bleak appearance strikes chill to my bones. But there is no reason for complaint, for the winter, so far, has been almost incomparable in excellence, until a few hours since and the sky seemed suddenly overcast and a heavy storm coming on us. It is but a few miles below and long ere this comes to you we will have had a snowstorm, at least you may think so, and as the appearance at a distance severe enough.

But snowstorms are not all we have to attract our attention and divert our minds. A few of the most interesting I must tell you. First and very important Mrs. Dr. Hauck has been quite sick the past week, being confined to her room entirely and to her bed most of the time, but at present is better.

Frank Forrester's infant has been very sick the past week.

More sidewalk has been laid until there has been a complete new walk laid half the length of the town.

Dr. Houck is having a new office built. Sasser has but lately put in a full stock of goods.

A Baptist church was organized here under the instructions of Rev. Mr. Moar of Arlington, who had been holding services here for about two weeks. A worthy and competent man who held his audience in rapt surprise as he told his story in so lucid and graphic a manner that left hardly a doubt in the unprejudiced minds of the hearers, that there was foundation for the truth of the assertions made. Everyone was better for his coming. Such a thing cannot be said of every minister that comes here, I am very sorry to say, but it is true. This is the first church organized here, although there were but few members we hope it may prosper.

Quite an amusing affray lent its ridiculous side to the people of Mitchell one day of last week; amusing as well as ridiculous. Mr. Frank Van Ordstrand and his wife were having some difficulty in the barroom of Sasser's hotel. Van Ordstrand struck her several times when O. S. Maxwell, of this place, interfered, which caused words to be passed between the men. Van Ordstrand called Maxwell a liar, when Maxwell struck him in the face with his fist. Van Ordstrand laid hold of the dinner bell, which was lying on a table near, and struck Maxwell a blow with it in the face. Maxwell caught and wrenched it away from Van Ordstrand giving him blow after blow on the head, cutting the scalp at each blow, until the man was well hashed to pieces, when friends interfered and parted them. The injuries of neither man are serious.

A dispute, which ended in a few slaps and slight bruises, occurred at a sale of some sheep at G. L. Frazell's place on Gird creek. A man by the name of Peterson, a herder, was selling the sheep for his wages, which amounted to $5.36. Frazell had a mortgage on the sheep against Kemp Berry. Peterson bid the sheep in for 61 cents per head, Mrs. Ed.

Parish, Kemp Berry's mother-in-law, and partner in the sheep, bid 62 cents per head. Peterson agreed to let her have them if she would pay cash. She could not do it. Peterson then gave Frazell a bill of sale on the sheep for the $5.36. This caused words to pass between Mrs. Parish and Frazell. She called him a liar. He retorted by saying, "While I have been at that, what you been doing?" At that Berry struck Frazell two or three times in the face. Anyone who knows Frazell knows also he was not long in returning blow for blow. Round and round, up and down, but soon friends parted them and but a few bruises were the result. So ends the chapter of pugilistic exercises. E. V. E.

At Armory Hall.

The entertainment given by the Episcopal Sunday school Christmas night was well attended, and was one of the very pleasantest affairs of the kind. There was some little trouble in getting the magic lantern to working rightly but this was soon remedied and the immense views perfect in every way held the attention not only of the little folks but of the larger ones also. The recitations and songs were thoroughly appreciated by all. Mr. Davis tells us he will give another exhibition with the magic lantern, as he has hundreds of views, and all well worth seeing.
