SAVING TIMBER IN MISSISSIPPI.

Stringent State Laws for the Preservation of Forests from Extinction.
Timber depredations, according to the New York Evening Post, have been stopped practically in Mississippi by a law which punishes offenders severely. There are large areas of forest land there belonging either to the United States government or to the state, and the temptation to settlers in remote regions to enter upon them and help themselves to wood was often too strong to be resisted. When driven from federal land by deputy United States marshals, the timber thieves found refuge in the state forests, which were not so well policed, and by moving from the one territory to the other they contrived to escape arrest. The federal officers finally became so vigilant that timber stealing proved a dangerous business, and the thieves transferred all their operations to the state lands. The legislature thereupon passed the law referred to, and it has improved the morals of the people so much that some districts which formerly were the scene of wholesale depredations are now almost free from the raids of poaching woodmen. The statute imposes a fine of two dollars per acre for each acre in every forty-acre subdivision of land upon which any trespass is committed. For the protection of private owners it also provides that for every tree cut down without their consent a fine of five dollars shall be paid.

Odd Phase of Sunstroke.
"A peculiar phase of sunstroke," said one of Philadelphia's most eminent physicians the other day, according to the Record, "is that a subject does not succumb to the attack until some hours after it occurs. The only explanation that medical science can give is that a sunstroke consists in a disintegration of the blood corpuscles, and considerable time elapses before the disintegrated blood reaches the nerve center in the brain which acts as a governor on the heat system of the body. The flow of the blood finally paralyzes the heat centers, and the heat runs riot, raising the temperature of the body to a fearful height within a few minutes. As an instance of heat prostration the doctor cited the statistics of the British army in India, where the great majority of sunstrokes take effect between seven and nine o'clock in the evening."
