SILVER IN GERMANY

International Monetary Congress Proposed.

BIMETALISM UNDER DISCUSSION

Resolutions Adopted Instructing the Federal Government to Issue Invitations to Other Nations.

BERLIN, Feb. 16.—The silver question in the United States and Europe has been the subject on which the political and financial worlds in Berlin have been chiefly occupied during the past week. The financial troubles in the United States are followed here with the closest attention and the National Zeitung, Oline's Journal and other newspapers have commented at various lengths upon the situation at Washington.

Wednesday night, during the subscription ball at the Royal opera house, the emperor showed the interest he felt in the matter by engaging in a lengthy conversation with Mr. Runyon, the American ambassador, on American financial affairs. The conversation touched on the tariff and political questions, but his majesty asked to be informed more especially about the financial crisis, the coinage troubles and the gold reserve in the national treasury. On receiving the information sought, he expressed a hope that financial matters in Mr. Runyon's country would be soon straightened out again. He also took occasion to refer to the close commercial relations between Germany and the United States.

An important phase of the silver question was reached today, when the reichstag declared in favor of the resolution submitted yesterday by Count von Mirbach, an agrarian leader, summoning another international conference on the currency question. Mirbach's resolution instructed the federal government to issue invitations for an international monetary congress, to take action for the rehabilitation of silver as a circulating medium. Previous to its adoption, Count von Posadowsky-Wegner, secretary of state for the imperial treasury, in behalf of the government, declared its sympathy with the object aimed at by the resolution. The resolution, which was submitted to the reichstag by Mirbach, had received the signatures of an unusually large number of the 210 members of that body, comprising conservatives, national liberals, ultra-montaines, and members of other parties. Among the signers were to be found not only the names of professed bimetalists, but other members who have heretofore maintained a more or less neutral attitude on the question of bimetalism.

The bimetalists who signed the motion want nothing more or less than bimetalism. But they have been prevented from formulating a motion to that effect by the opposition of their moderate colleagues, who did not desire an alteration of the gold currency. There is a suspicion afloat that the support of the latter is not entirely genuine, but has as its motive a desire to bring about an international conference, whose decision, they believe, would be adverse to the reinstatement of silver, and thus settle the question for some time to come. The result of the debate was fore-shadowed yesterday, when Prince Hohenlohe indicated the attitude of the government in a carefully-worded declaration, which he read, as follows:

"Without prejudicing our imperial currency, one must confess that the difference in the value of gold and silver continues to react upon our commercial life. Following, therefore, the tendencies which lead to the appointment of a civil commission. I am ready to consider, in conjunction with the federal government, whether we cannot enter upon a friendly interchange of opinion as to common remedial measures, with the other states that are chiefly interested in maintaining the value of silver."

When Mirbach's motion came up in the reichstag this afternoon in its regular order, the discussion was resumed by Siegel, a national liberal. He opposed the resolution, and urged that the impression should not be created abroad that the reichstag considered the existing monetary system unsuited to the interests of Germany. He was convinced that Great Britain would take no part in any international agreement for the introduction of a double standard. Leuschner, of the reichspartei, declared he was in favor of an international conference, which, he was fully persuaded, would adopt the principle of bimetalism. Richter, of the people's party, said that Hohenlohe was temporizing. His attitude indicated a desire on the part of the government to bow before the agrarians. This vacillation was a danger in such an important matter. The present resolution was an agrarian intermezzo, preceding the principal act by the protectionist resolution of Count von Kanitz. If he got nothing, the agrarians would stir up such discontent as would not be allayed by 10 anti-revaluation bills. Count von Posadowsky-Wegner, who followed Richter, said that it was not denied that the ever-falling price of silver was prejudicial to industry and to the German silver mines. Consequently the decline tended to deprive a large body of workmen of their means of subsistence. Even monometalists admitted that the depreciation in the price of silver was hurtful. Continuing, he added:

"The premier and minister of finance of France had stated that France must revert to the double standard and that Germany was responsible, because she first began the use of the silver standard. The rural population believed that the fall in the price of silver was answerable for the fall in the value of the product. This opinion was shared, moreover, by many manufacturers. Therefore, it was the duty of the government to return a benevolent answer to the question which had been put by a majority of the reichstag."

This utterance was greeted with much conservative cheering. Von Kardoff, a well known champion of the law, described bimetalism as a protection to the German peasant classes as a sure bulwark against socialism. This remark was greeted with derisive laughter from the socialist benches. The chief opposition against a double standard came from the privy councilors in the ministerial departments. Count Wegner here arose from his seat and declared that the chiefs of the departments were responsible for the policy of the departments. After a speech by Meyer, which elicited a reply from Von Kardoff, the motion of Mirbach was put to the house and carried, amid loud applause from the members of the right. The motion was carried by the united votes of the conservatives and centrists, and, with a few exceptions, the national liberals.

The Gold Deposit.

New York, Feb. 16.—Of the $22,000,000 gold deposited in New York and other cities, $1,000,000 has been deposited out of town, at San Francisco and Baltimore. The $10,000,000 deposited in the legal depositories, the First, Park and City National banks and the Bank of Commerce, today represent principally the gold holdings of these banks, which were taken from the banks' accounts and credited on the books to the government account, subject to the disposition of the treasury department. It was reported in Wall street, although the managers of the syndicate decline to confirm the report, that the syndicate has sold $30,000,000 worth of bonds 11%, leaving only $2,500,000 more bonds to be placed in this country. However, a member of the syndicate stated today that only a comparatively small portion of the bonds would be offered for sale, as the banks desire to retain their bonds to a large extent as a basis for new circulation when money begins to harden later in the year, as is anticipated. The savings banks are also desirous of obtaining a proportion of the bonds for investment. Bids at 115 were made today to members of the syndicate, but were not considered. The managers of the syndicate intend to offer the bonds at a price which will insure a quick absorption of the amount to be sold, and will not base their judgment on any such isolated bids as have been made for small scattered lots. Russell Sage, who withdrew $550,000 in gold from the subtreasury yesterday, is not and will not be a member of the syndicate, and none of the syndicate members will take any of the gold from him. All the members of the last syndicate who withdrew gold from the subtreasury have been carefully excluded from the Belmont-Morgan syndicate.
