GREAT LABOR LEADER

Eugene V. Debs is Now in Portland.

IS ACCOMPANIED BY GOODWIN

He Talks of the Conspiracy and Contempt Charges Against the Leaders of the A. R. U.

PORTLAND, March 21. — Eugene V. Debs, president of the American Railway Union, accompanied by Roy M. Goodwin, a director of the union, arrived in Portland last night, and will lecture this evening. His tour is taken for the purpose of raising funds for the defense of the American Railway Union leaders. Regarding the conspiracy trial, Mr. Debs said:

"The trial opened January 24 and closed February 8. One of the jurors was taken sick, and the jury was discharged without a conclusion of the case. The trial could have been legally continued by consent of counsel, upon impaneling another juror, or with 11 jurors, but the prosecution would not agree to it. The case was put over for a second trial until the first Monday in May, but it is the opinion of my lawyers that the case will never be tried. When the trial closed the prosecution had offered all of its testimony, and we had begun with our witnesses. The prosecution had not one scrap of real testimony. I am very anxious to have the case tried, and, if I am guilty, to be punished, and if not, to be vindicated. An acquittal by a jury would be in the nature of a vindication.

"The contempt proceedings, he said, were brought for violation for injunctions issued by Judge Woods, United States circuit judge, on July 2, 1894, restraining the American Railway Union from directing the strike, and myself and colleagues as officers of the union.

There were two of these cases. One was by the United States government and one by the Santa Fe Railroad Company. The Santa Fe Company was in the hands of a receiver, in Judge Wood's court, and therefore, was directly in the custody of the court. These cases were tried before Judge Wood, without a jury, and I was sentenced to six months in the county jail, in each case, and my eight official colleagues to three months in each case. These sentences are concurrent, and, therefore, amount to six months in my case, and three months to each of the others. In these cases the interests involved are of the fundamental principles and rights of labor to organize for its protection; to act in concert, or for a body of men to quit work simultaneously. So we concluded to appeal the case to the United States supreme court. There never has been a decision on this subject by the United States supreme court, and we believe it will be well to have it. The ground of appeal is on the validity of the injunction of Judge Wood.

"The Santa Fe case is not subject to appeal, as that company is in the hands of a receiver in Judge Wood's court, and is consequently in the hands of the court, and there can be no question of the jurisdiction of that court, and its right to control property in its possession. So we moved a suspension of sentence in the Santa Fe cases, until we served the government sentence, and pending the supreme court decision, the government sentence is held in abeyance. If the supreme court decides adversely, these two sentences will now become cumulative, and I will have to serve one year and my colleagues six months. The hearing is to be had before the full supreme bench, March 25, and a decision is expected during the early part of May. There will be exhaustive arguments upon the law. The decision is of as much importance to the industrial interests as was the Dred Scott decision to slavery, and it is being anxiously awaited throughout the entire country. If adverse, it will be a death-blow to labor."

MR. DEBS' LECTURE.
Concerning Debs' lecture on "Who are the conspirators?" at Seattle the Post Intelligencer says: It was splendidly delivered, and elicited frequent and repeated applause. He proved himself a polished speaker, and for 2½ hours the interest never flagged. In his argument he was plain, conclusive and convincing; his earnestness was profound, and his rhetoric, metaphor and figures of speech poetical, pathetic and enthusiastic. He demonstrated that he has been a student of human nature of well as of good books, the classics, Shakespeare, Ruskin, Carlyle, McCauley and Burns seeming to be his favorite authors. Those who expected that he would pose as a martyr, as a result of the six months' imprisonment in the county jail at Celcago for the part he played as leader of the strike, were disappointed. He only referred to the incident of his imprisonment two or three times, and then in a dry, humor way that provoked continued laughter instead of indignation. In describing the incidents leading up to his residence in the jail, he said:

"When I was served with the injunction from Judge Jenkins' court restraining me from holding high communion with myself, from writing letters or telegrams, and from talking with my fellow men, I went to two of the best lawyers in Chicago, and asked them what I should do, and they told me I had violated no law and could continue as I had been doing."

Here Mr. Debs stopped for a moment, and there was profound silence. Then he added, in a dry, matter-of-fact way: "I took their advice and got six months!"

For a period of five minutes pandemonium reigned, there being alternate applause and laughter. As the speaker stood before the audience, his black eyes sparkling and the corners of his mouth drawn up with a suspicion of a smile which he endeavored to suppress, he looked very much like Bill Nye, in one of the latter's lucid moments. Altogether the resemblance between Bill Nye and Mr. Debs is at times striking, especially when the latter becomes humorous, as he does frequently.

Mr. Debs declared the newspapers had given but one side of the story of the recent unpleasantness, and said that the members of the Railway Managers' Association in Chicago were really the conspirators, and not the employees, or the officials of the American Railway Union.

A SAD PICTURE OF PULLMAN.
He pathetically described the misery and poverty of the little town of Pullman, and told of the greed of the Pullman Company, and said that at a time
