REPUBLICANS AND THE SENATE

There are indications that the republicans will organize the senate, and that they will do it without any populist aid. Senator Chandler, it will be remembered, wanted a deal with the populists on this question, which would give the combination five or six majority. Along to the present time, however, says the Globe-Democrat, only one or two other republican senators have said anything in favor of this scheme, and several of them have talked against it. Apparently it never had a chance of securing much republican support. The populists, of course, could be relied on to favor it. It would give them prominent places on a few committees, and would, in a certain sense, put them in an alliance with the party which is going to run the country for the next few years. Naturally a combination of this sort would have great attractions for the populists.

After the Utah members take their seats, however, the republicans will have forty-five senators, or just half the whole number, and it is understood that Jones of Nevada will voluntarily lend them a hand in the organization, and thus give them a majority. Jones will do this as an ex-republican, and not as a populist. He is a republican on all questions except silver coinage, and this, as he knows, is not going to be an issue in the present congress. Dominance in the senate is not very ardently desired by any republicans at the present time, for with the president against them, they would still be without full control over legislation. They would have responsibility without having power. This condition would be unsatisfactory at any time; but now, on the eve of a presidential election, it will require skill to prevent it from being especially burdensome and embarrassing.

Speaker Reed is expected to steer congress—the senate as well as the house—through the dangerous places until after the election. He is an aspirant for the candidacy, and for his own welfare, as well as for that of his party, he will be anxious to keep the party out of trouble in the coming session. One of his tasks will be to prevent a re-opening of the tariff question, which would happen if the threats to propose bills putting wool on the dutiable list and increasing the duties on tin plate and other articles are carried out. Bills of that sort are not likely to be allowed to come up in the house in the coming session. They could not possibly do any good, for the president would veto them, and they would do harm by bringing up the entire tariff question for discussion, which would disturb trade, give the democrats a chance to rally, and hurt the republicans in 1896. The time for the republicans to present a partisan policy is when they get complete control of the government in 1897.

Early Days of Fort Dalles Recalled.

In yesterday's dispatches was announced the death of Captain Thomas Jordan, at one time in the regular army, and later in the Confederate service. Captain Jordan was stationed in The Dalles at the time the military post was here, and his death has caused a friend of THE CHRONICLE to write the following reminiscence article, which will be of interest to those who wish to learn of the early history of The Dalles:

The death of Captain Jordan should be of more than passing interest to us in this vicinity, he being quarter-master at the post of Fort Dalles during the erection of the building which succeeded the first log huts that were temporarily put up. If he who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before, is worthy of commendation, Capt. Jordan might be forgiven many subsequent sins. It was he who sowed over the bluff around the government spring the seeds of white clover, the seeds of which have helped to start many a lawn in our city, and some of which still flourish where they have not been extirpated by the spade of improvement.

Along with this, the horses of the cavalry regiment turned the sward of the native grass growing on their exercise ground into a desert, which increases yearly. But this was not the fault of Capt. Jordan, nor was he to blame for the charge of extravagant expenditure which was often brought against him. It is not easy to build well and inexpensively when carpenters are paid $10 a day in gold, and when planing mills are not, but every stroke in the construction has to be made by the strong hand of the builder, unaided by mechanical invention. It is not easy to build posts for frontier protection as Fort Dalles was built, and at the same time take advantage of the cheapening advantages of densely populated centers. Some of us, who were children not long ago, remember the dam on Mill creek that supplied the power to the saw-mill which got out the lumber used in the construction of the houses. The remains of this dam were removed after poor Riley was drowned there while trying to rescue his dog, which was in some way caught among the old timbers.

Capt. Jordan had fine taste in building, and Uncle Sam is supposed to have a long purse, and so it was that we boasted of as picturesque a collection of officers quarters as could be found the world over. The customary tradition of "two rooms and a kitchen" received its usual generous interpretation in army quarters. A room is but a room, though it may be subdivided by any number of sliding doors, and any portion of the upper stories, the upper angle of which is cut off by the roof to ever so small a degree, does not count. It will be long before our city has another $100,000 building in its residence quarters. We had our little pride in the commandant's house. It went out in a blaze of glory. But one of Capt. Jordan's buildings is still standing, called, we believe, the captain's quarters. A tall reminiscence of the old garrison will be some day an interesting theme for our local historian.

The buildings are about through with their usefulness; the builder is at rest; the parade ground is cut up into town lots, and grow roses and chrysanthemums. We do not forget that he raised his hand against his government; but we would "be to his virtues very kind" and remember his faithfulness wherein he was faithful.

SALEM—LA GRANDE—ARLINGTON.

Salem Statesman: You do your part. Don't wait for your neighbor to do his. If this latter had always been the rule of action we would still all be monkeys hanging by our tails from African gum trees. The measure of progress before you now is the rebuilding of the woolen mill. Push it along.

La Grande Chronicle: The Commercial club is meeting with far more encouragement than was at first anticipated. All of the leading business men of the city have taken hold of the affair with a will and the Athletic club has nobly responded to the recent heavy assessment and put up their five hundred dollars. Good, substantial business men and enthusiastic citizens are taking hold of the affair and will make a success of it.

Arlington Record: Mr. Jas. W. Smith has a fine grove situated on the road just south of town which he will donate to the city to be fitted for and used as a park provided the city will enter a contract to use it for that purpose. The tract comprises about ten acres and is already set out in trees which are large enough for shade purposes. Mr. Smith has spent a large sum of money on this particular tract of land and in turning it over to the city will ask nothing in return except a guarantee that the grove will be fitted and trimmed for a park and that it will be kept in a good state of preservation.

thinness

The diseases of thinness are scrofula in children, consumption in grown people, poverty of blood in either. They thrive on leanness. Fat is the best means of overcoming them. Everybody knows cod-liver oil makes the healthiest fat. In Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil the taste is hidden, the oil is digested, it is ready to make fat.

When you ask for Scott's Emulsion and your druggist gives you a package in a salmon-colored wrapper with the picture of the man and fish on it—you can trust that man!
