EDWARD D. BAKER.

Oregon conferred honor upon herself when she sent Edward D. Baker, the warrior statesman, to the United States senate. Baker's memory has been kept alive in the traditions of the state, and the following sketch of his life career, which is taken in an abbreviated form from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, cannot fail to be of interest to Oregonians. Baker was one of the West's greatest men.

The circuit court at Springfield, Ill., from 1835 to 1840 represented a remarkable measure of future judicial and political distinction. Stephen T. Logan was the presiding judge, Stephen A. Douglas was the prosecuting attorney, and the bar included such men as Abraham Lincoln; O. H. Browning, Samuel H. Teat, John J. Hardin, Lyman Trumbull, Cyrus Walker, and Edward D. Baker. These men were all good public speakers in their several ways, but the surpassing orator among them was Baker. He was an Englishman by birth, whose parents had come to America when he was 4 years of age, locating in Philadelphia, from whence he had drifted out to Illinois in 1825, being then a boy of 14. For several years he supported himself by manual labor, and devoted all his spare time to study, with the determination to qualify himself for a professional career. He first became an exhorter in the Christian church, attracting marked attention by the earnestness and picturesqueness of his style; and then he concluded to become a lawyer, which meant also a politician. His services were in general demand on account of his influence with jurists, and his reputation was increased by the stump speeches that he was always ready to deliver. His ambition was restless and far-reaching, and he missed no opportunity to extend his acquaintance and to put himself in the way of official preferment.

The greatest of Baker's orations, and one of the greatest ever delivered by anybody, was that which the death of his friend, David C. Broderick, called forth. It will be remembered that Broderick was killed by Judge Terry in a duel in 1859; and Baker was chosen by common consent to pronounce the eulogy which was a part of what he called "the mournful tribute which the majesty of the people offer to the unrepenting dead." He spoke of "the senator lying dead before us" as a man who "toiled with his own hands, and sprang at a bound from the workshop to the legislative hall," a man of simple habits and sterling integrity who was pursued with relentless bitterness by his political enemies, but who never flinched for a moment in "the great struggle for the rights of the people against the despotism of organization and the corruption of power. The manner of his death, tangled in the meshes of the code of honor," was dwelt upon by the orator with a passionate protest against the practice of dueling, which he characterized as "a shield emblazoned with the name of chivalry to cover the malignity of murder." Its boasted equality he declared to be a lie. In reality, he said, "it substitutes cold and deliberate preparation for courage and manly impulse, and arms the one to disarm the other." In closing he exclaimed, "But the last word must be spoken, the imperious mandate of death must be fulfilled. Thus, oh, brave heart, we bear thee to thy rest. Thus, surrounded by tens of thousands, we leave thee to the equal grave. As in life no other voice so rung its trumpet blast upon the ear of freedom, so in death its echoes will reverberate amid our mountains and valleys until truth and valor cease to appeal to the human heart. Hail and farewell!"

Soon after the death of Broderick, Baker removed to Oregon, where his reputation had preceded him, and he was elected to the United States senate. He returned to California in 1860, on his way to Washington, proud and happy over the victory that had been the ultimate ambition of his life. They gave him a big reception at San Francisco, and he delivered a speech that could never be forgotten by those who heard it. While performing his duty as a senator, Baker found time to organize what was known as the California regiment, and was made its colonel. He frequently entered the senate to deliver a speech with his uniform on; and when the special session ended, August 6, he hastened to the front, eager for the fray. His regiment was assigned to the division of Gen. Stone in the army of the Potomac, and he was placed in command of a brigade. On the 21st of October, he was ordered to make a reconnaissance across the Potomac, and it turned out to be the awful blunder of Ball's Bluff. His troops were caught in a trap, and a large proportion of them killed, wounded and captured; and he himself fell, pierced with six bullets. The disaster was partly his own fault, but his bravery condoned his indiscretion, and history has tenderly placed his name in the list of heroes. His death was one of the first great sorrows of the war to Lincoln, who had so long admired his ability and prized his friendship. His body was taken to California and buried near the tomb of Broderick; but Illinois and Oregon may also claim a share in his fame, and the whole country owes homage to his memory as of a signally brilliant orator, a capable and worthy statesman, and a citizen whose impulses and tendencies were all on the side of those beneficent sentiments which contribute to the welfare and happiness of society.

By its action in appropriating $600 for the Rattlesnake road the Sherman county court has shown itself alive to the county's best interests. The influence of the road, though not yet completed, has already been felt by the farming portions of the county, and the outlet which is furnished for their produce will give them the advantage of a competitive market, causing higher prices to be paid for their wheat. The county court deserves commendation for its wisdom.

A Suggestion From Mr. Morgan.
EDITOR CHRONICLE:—I have often heard some of the pioneers talk of the boundary line of Oregon. At the assembly, a number of the gentlemen suggested that the summit of the Cascade mountains be the line, and since I came to Eastern Oregon I believe it would have been better for the people here. It is a great expense to send our insane and our prisoners so far, besides a number of other expenses could be saved and would reduce our taxes one-half. It is a question that should be discussed among the people of Eastern Oregon and at some future time it should be put to a vote at the general election.

Father Tells How His Baby Suffered from Eczema.

IN ITS WORST FORM
Crowd Worse Under Treatment of Best Physicians, Tried

CUTICURA REMEDIES
Great Chance in Five Days. To-day Entirely Cured. With Nice Head of Hair. Lively and Healthy.

I had a baby that had Eczema in its worst form. I had one of the best physicians in the city attending her, but she continued to get worse all the time under his treatment. He finally admitted that he was at his wits' end. I then got CUTICURA REMEDIES, and in a few days noticed great change in her condition. She continued to improve after that, and today is entirely cured. My nice head of hair, and is lively and healthy. I can fully recommend them as being the best medicines for the cure of this disease. I spent considerable money for drugs and doctor's bills, which was useless in this case, for I think if your remedies don't cure, nothing will. I am telling every one that I see suffering about CUTICURA REMEDIES, and can cheerfully recommend them to those in need of them.

BAKE A BATCH OF BISCUITS

Sift one quart of flour, two rounding teaspoons of baking powder, and one teaspoonful of salt into a bowl; add three teaspoonsful of COTTOLENE and rub together until thoroughly mixed; then add sufficient milk to make a soft dough; knead slightly, roll out about half an inch thick, and cut with a hot biscuit cutter. Place a little apart in a greased pan, and bake in a quick oven for fifteen or twenty minutes. These biscuits should be a delicate brown top and bottom, light on the sides, and snowy white when broken open.

The secret of success in this recipe, as in others, is to use but two-thirds as much Cottolene as you used to use of lard.

Cottolene

will make the biscuit light, delicious, wholesome. Better than any biscuit you ever made before. Try it. Be sure and get genuine Cottolene. Sold everywhere in tins with trade-marks — "Cottolene" and steer's head in cotton-plant wreath — on every tin.

Summons.
In the Circuit Court of the State of Oregon for Wasco County.
William L. Isbell, Plaintiff.
Mattie J. Isbell, Defendant.
To Mattie J. Isbell, the above named defendant: In the name of the State of Oregon, you are hereby required to appear in the above entitled court, and answer the complaint filed against you in said court and cause, on or before the first day of the next regular term of the Circuit Court for Wasco County, Oregon, following the expiration of six weeks publication of this summons, to-wit, Monday, the 30th day of February, 1896, and you will take notice that if you fail to so appear and answer, for want thereof, plaintiff will take judgment against you for the relief prayed for in his complaint, to-wit: A decree of divorce forever dissolving the bonds of marriage heretofore and now existing between plaintiff and defendant, and for such other relief as may be equitable and just.
This summons is served upon you by publication thereof in The Dalles CHRONICLE, a weekly newspaper of general circulation, published at The Dalles, Wasco County, Oregon, by order of Hon. W. L. Bradshaw, judge of the above named court.
Dated at Dalles City, Or., December 24, 1895.
